This is to ask the help of your readers with a book I am researching on the personal uses of marijuana in Canada. Twenty five years ago, half of all convictions for possession of marijuana buy Canadians resulted in 100 day sentences. Today that figure has dropped to about two percent, even though the laws have not changed. Judges have apparently concluded from the findings of some 1200 studies that marijuana is not a threat to health or social order. And yet, the federal government's Bill C7 proposes to stiffen penalties for marijuana offenses. So, what are pot smokers - who knows more about marijuana than either politicians or the courts - to make of this paradox? I would like to correspond with any of your readers, either students or faculty who have ideas, experiences or anecdotes about marijuana in their lives. Anonymity guaranteed. Please write to PO Box 54094, North Vancouver, V7M 3L5, fax 604 984-8865 or e-mail JG@unixg.ubc.ca
