THE TWO CLERKS.

IN Market Square, in the pleasant city of Merryport, was a crockeryware store, over the door of which was a black sign bearing in gilt letters the name of Benjamin Hudson. For many years this crockery store had been there, with the great big pitcher hanging in front for a sign ; indeed, when Mr. Hudson first opened the store, some forty years previous, he was quite a young man, and the sign over his door was bright and handsome. The owner was called 'Old Hudson' by the boys and girls of that city.

Mr. Benjamin Hudson had grown rich in his business, for he had conducted it all himself, and taking care that nothing should be wasted or lost by neglect. He had made mistakes, to be sure, as every man will make some blunders during a lifetime, but by skilful management he quietly recovered from them. Sixty-five years had begun to bend over Mr. Hudson's shoulders and dim the brightness of his eyes, and he found business more irksome than it formerly had been.

'I must have a partner,' said he one day to himself, as he sat before a cheerful fire. 'I must have some one interested in the business who is young and active and will take the weight off my shoulders, for I do not care to do as I used to."

Now, in Hudson's employment were two young men, Herbert Bond and Charles Seymour. They had been with him an equal length of time, and performed their duties faithfully and well. Charles did his work quickly, and had a smart way that made people think he was greatly superior to Herbert, who had a more quiet demeanor, and accomplished quite as much without making as great a stir about it.

'I must have Herbert or Charles for a partner,' soliloquized Mr. Hudson. 'On which can I decide? They both do very well in the store, but I ought to know something of them out of the store, and I am sorry to say that this is a point I have never paid proper attention to. My clerks come here in the morning and go away at night; what becomes of them over night I know not, and yet I ought to know. Neither of them have parents in the city, both live in some of the numerous boarding houses, and I hope they are steady and well behaved. I must see them in their homes and then decide which shall be my partner."

The next day Mr. Hudson ascertained the boarding places of his clerks without letting them know for what purpose, and after supper that evening his wife and daughters were somewhat surprised to see him go to the hall and put on his hat and coat,

'Where are you going, papa?' asked Lily, the youngest daughter, who could hardly remember the evening when her father had not remained at home.

'I am going to make a call, Lily, on two young men of my acquaintance ; I shall not be gone long,' replied Mr. Hudson, and bidding them good-bye immediately started out.

Herbert's boarding house was the nearer of the two, and here Mr. Hudson stopped first.

It was a neat looking house in a pleasant street. Mrs. Bustin, the landlady, opened the door when Mr. Hudson rang.

'Does a young man named Herbert Bond board here ?'

'He does. Walk in, sir, and I will call him,' replied the woman.

'I will go to his room, if you will show me where it is,' answered Mr. Hudson. 'I presume he is in it?'

'I think so ; he is seldom out in the evening. You can step up here if you like, sir ; go up two flights, and the first door to the right is the one,' replied Mrs. Bustin.

Mr. Hudson puffed up the stairs and knocked with his cane at the designated door. It was opened by Herbert, who looked very much amazed when he saw his employer, and said :

'Why, Mr. Hudson, is anything the matter in the store? Nothing happened out of the way I hope ?

'No—nothing—nothing at all,' said Hudson, walking up and taking a chair. 'I took a notion to call around this evening and see you.'

Bond expressed himself very glad to see his employer, and as he took his hat and cane, Mr. Hudson glanced around the room. It was an attic room, with dormer windows ; a good fire was burning in the grate, a book rack filled with books adorned one side of the room and the centre of the floor was occupied by a table on which were writing matrials.

'You look very cosy here, Herbert, but why do you have an attic room? Are there none you can have below stairs?'

'Oh, yes, sir ; but this is a dollar a week cheaper, and I have all the more money to send to my father,' replied Herbert.

'Isn't your father well off?' inquired Mr. Hudson.

'Not very, sir, he used to be pretty rich, but his business was disastrous and he lost a good deal of money,' said Bond.

'What do you find to do in the evenings? Does not time hang very heavily?'

'Oh, no, sir! I have books to read and letters to write. To-night I am writing home ; they want me to make them a visit, but I write that it is a pretty busy time just now, but when it is over I shall ask for a few days absence,' answered Herbert.

'You shall have it willingly,' said Mr. Hudson and then he added : 'Does Charles ever call on you?'

'No, sir. I have asked him several times, but he has never called.'

'Are you contented here in this boarding house?' inquired Mr. Hudson.

'It is a very good boarding house and Mrs. Bustin is very kind, but I have often wished that I could live at home,' answered Herbert.

'And why can't you? How far is it from here ?' asked his employer.

'Twenty-five miles, sir ; rather too far to travel every day, and then I can't afford the expense,' was Herbert's reply.

'What time could you reach the store in the morning?'

'At about half-past eight, sir !'

'Not very bad hours for business. Perhaps it can be arranged so that you can live at home, Herbert.'

'Oh, I should like it so much if I could. I am so home sick here in the city?' was the clerk's reply.

'Well, I will look into the matter, Herbert. It seems a pity that one who is so fond of his home cannot live there in these times of railways and fast travelling,' said Mr. Hudson as he rose to depart. Herbert thanked him for his visit, and said it would please him very much to have Mr. Hudson call again.

The old gentleman descended the stairs well satisfied with his call, and said to himself :

'Now for Charles Seymour. I hope that I shal find him as well occupied as Herbert Bond.'

The boarding house was reached, the bell rang, and Mr. Hudson was admitted. The servant said Seymour was in, and ushered him to his chamber door. Mr. Hudson knocked, and the door was swung wide open and a voice exclaimed :

'Well, old chap, got along at last, have you? We are all ready for you, have you got——'

Charles Seymour stopped here, and his face turned suddenly pale at seeing instead of his boon companion, his venerable employer. It was several seconds before he could recover his speech.

'I beg your pardon. Mr. Hudson, you must excuse me, I expected a friend this evening, and in the dim light of the entry I thought you were he. Walk in, sir, and sit down.'

Mr. Hudson entered the room and was somewhat surprised to see three young men who had once insulted him on the street ; they were smoking cigars, and had their feet elevated on the bureau, mantle piece and bedstead. Mr. Hudson saw at once that he was in confusion, and that his actions were painful and awkward. Nevertheless his employer started a conversation, and had been there but a few moments when footsteps were heard on the stairs, the door opened a little and a bottle of champagne came rolling across the floor, followed by a round Dutch cheese, a bunch of cigars and two more bottles. Seymour looked dreadfully distressed, but could do nothing It was a fourth friend who had been out after refreshments, and took this facetious mode of introducing them into the chamber. Mr. Hudson thought it was time for him to go, so he took his leave and returned to his home.

Mr. Hudson was not long in making up his mind as to which of his clerks would make the most faithful and efficient partner, and in less than a week it was announced in the papers that Herbert Bond was a member of the firm of Benjamin Hudson & Co. It was a happy day for Herbert, and it was not many years before he managed the whole business himself, and he became a wealthy man.

Charles Seymour knows very well the reason of Mr. Hudson's choice, and he always had to regret having formed such unprofitable acquaintances as we assembled in his room that unlucky night.

THE LOBSTER BUSINESS.—Says the Yarmouth Herald : It is estimated that there have been shipped from Yarmouth to Boston this season, no less than 9,000 cases of live lobsters. These cases contained 70 lobsters each, making a total of $30,000. Their average value in Yarmouth was $3.50 per case, or $31,500.00. Besides these, there were about 1,260,000 lobsters, under shipment size, viz. : 10½ inches, sold to the canning factories at about 60c. per hundred, or $7,570.00. This, added to the above sum, makes a total of $39,060.00. It required the services of five small steamers and a number of sailing smacks to carry them from the different depots to Yarmouth. About 800 men were employed throughout the season, catching, pounding and casing the lobsters.
