Let's Talk It Over

There is only one topic of conversation in Summerside at present - the town's first Lobster Carnival and its outstanding success. Much credit must be given to Charles Hogan and his committee. They did a man-sized job in super-man style. Naturally the effort fell somewhat short of perfection as is invariably the case when mice and men lay schemes for the future. Mistakes were probably made, and the leaders can doubtless see where procedures and techniques may be improved another year. This is natural and inevitable but the overall picture of Summerside's 1956 Lobster Carnival is a glowing one. Many of our visitors seemed to be having a thoroughly enjoyable time, and their appreciation of the service and entertainment they received while here.

One of the highlights, for us, was the impression our Sea Cadet Band made in their marches and band concerts. These boys are improving by leaps and bounds and Summerside can indeed be proud of this local group. Gabriel Chasson, their leader, is to be congratulated on their improvement in the few years since their organization. It was a happy inspiration to have them down from Sydney to Summerside for the festive week. We don't know whose idea it was, but take a bow, whoever you are. The parades were colorful and like the Pied Piper of Hamelin, they always led the spectators to the mecca of gustatory enjoyment, the delicious lobster supper. The red-nosed crustacean took over then, and proved beyond doubt that he was the proper personage to be cast in the title role. We enjoyed The Hon. Watson MacNaught's reference to the Latin derivation of the word "carnival" (meaning - "Flesh, farewell") and his admonition to his listeners of the implication in the word and stick strictly to fish during the carnival.
