MORAL RECOVERY

There is such a thing as moral recovery. General Booth could testify to it and Harold Begbie in his book on "Broken Earthenware" gives added evidence. Recently I heard of men who had given up drink because of the Alcoholics Anonymous Association. Both of them had been "down and out."

It was in that period that Jesus washed His disciple's feet as they reclined at the table. Guests were expected to bathe in preparation for a feast, and then, as they walked with sandaled feet to the house of their host, their feet became dusty, and it was ordinary hospitality for the host to provide for the washing of their feet as they entered his home.

Then Jesus arose from the table and took the slave's place at the feet of His followers.

Can you imagine the scene? If the atmosphere had been tense before, it was electric then. John, who tells the story, tells us that it was not in forgetfulness of His true dignity that Jesus acted in this way, but that it was in the full consciousness of His supremacy and Dignity that He did what He did. In particular, it was an expression of His love for the men whom He was about to leave, for "having loved His own who were in the world, He loved them to the uttermost." Here He loved them to the farthest limit of lowly service.

Can you imagine the Son of God just before His passion, at the feet of Judas, His betrayer? Or before Peter, the impulsive and unsteady, in spite of Peter's protests? Says Shakespeare, "Love... hears it out even to the edge of doom."

Here is the majestic in the mental, and let the mental become the majestic.

True greatness henceforth consists in ability to give service, and no longer in the power to command service.

The spirit of the servant is no longer servile; the will to serve is divine. "Such was ever love's way - to rise it stoops."

The first requisite in a disciple or follower is trust in His Master's wisdom and love. Peter's protest, first, that Christ was doing too much, and second, that He was doing too little, shows how hard it is for human nature to recognize that our first question must never be: "What can I do for God?" but rather, "What would God do for me?" As Archbishop Temple put it in this connection: "Man's humility does not begin with the giving of service; it begins with the readiness to receive it."

Then, having received what Christ alone can give, we are called to follow Him. Jesus drew home the lesson of His act parable by saying: "I have given you an example that you also should do as I have done to you."

It is personal service that Jesus here calls for. Our generation is providing generously for service by great institutions. One example is right before the citizens of Toronto now—the appeal of the General Hospital, an appeal which should find a response in every heart. It

THE SPIRIT OF SERVICE
Is only one of the many institutions in our city which exist to serve. But all that any institution can do is to provide for the person to person services of innumerable doctors, nurses, social workers, and people of goodwill everywhere. This service calls for the highest qualifications that science and skill can enable our young people to attain.

The difference between Sairy Gamp whom Dickens describes with her rough and ready helpfulness, and the nurse of today with her high training and noble spirit has been made by the application of Jesus' idea of the dignity of personal service. We cannot support too liberally the institutions which train such workers and provide the facilities for their ministrations. We must at the same time keep in mind that gifts which support others in service do not absolve us from the obligation to serve personally in the way Christ describes.

This means also a complete change in our sense of the worth of persons as persons, apart from the accidents of their position or possessions. St. Francis interpreted Jesus' will by service alone; others might preach or rule, but he gave himself to meet the needs of men. Gilbert Chesterton wrote of him: "I have said of him that St. Francis deliberately did not see the wood for trees. It is even more true that he deliberately did not see the mob for the men... he never saw before him a many-headed beast. He only saw the image of God multiplied but never monotonous... There was never a man who looked into those brown burning eyes without being certain that Francis Bernardone was really interested in him. For he treated the whole mob of men as a mob of Kings."

This is the very essence of the Christian doctrine of man. As Jesus said of just such service: "Inasmuch as you did it to one of the least of these my brethren you did it to me."
