HAPPENINGS

The Afternoon Auxiliary and the Mary Miller Auxiliary of the W.M.S. of Trinity United Church, Charlottetown, held a joint Thank-offering service in Heart Memorial Hall on Tuesday evening, March 24. Rev. A. Frank MacLean presided and Mrs. K. A. Parker was pianist. The worship service was conducted by Mrs. R. S. Latimer, Miss Christine Todd and Mrs. Allison Mutch. The hymn, "We Sing the Praise of Him Who Died," was sung, followed by Scripture reading from Luke 24:15-31, and prayer. Mrs. Latimer gave a brief commentary on the Scripture which had been read. Rev. Foster Hall sang "O Sacred Head Now Wounded." The offering was received and dedicated.

Mr. MacLean introduced the speaker, Rev. Foster Hall, minister of Hunter River United Church. He took as his text Mark 15:17. He pointed out that Jesus is a crown of challenge, a crown of glory; to the men who placed it on His head it was a crown of everlasting shame; to us it is a crown of challenge.

At the end of the sermon Mr. Hall sang as a solo "Come Let Us Sing of a Wonderful Love." The closing hymn was "Beneath the Cross of Jesus." Rev. R. S. Latimer pronounced the benediction.

The meeting then adjourned to the Social Hall where an hour of fellowship was enjoyed.

IDA BAILEY ALLEN

Hanging Herb Garden Source Of Good Flavor

The Chef stood near the window admiring the gilded hanging basket of fresh herbs. "They're thriving, Madame," he remarked. "All winter we have enjoyed their beauty, their aroma and wonderful flavor. We have cut many times from these three herbs, but the plants seem to grow even faster."

ADD FLAVOR

"The thyme I like to muce to use in chicken and fish dishes and with the excellent canned peas you put up last summer. The rose geranium has yielded leaves to give a wonderful taste to applesauce, and the burnet, which has a faint cucumber flavor. I like to use in a salad of mince and dust over heated, canned, whole tomatoes."

"And to give that epicurean taste to canned or cooked whole vegetables, there is nothing that can excel an herb sauce."

All measurements are level. Fines herbs sauce: For canned or whole a sprag of spears, broccoli or whole green beans or broiled or boiled fish.

Combine 1 tsp. fine-grated onion, 4 drops liquid garlic, 2 tsp. each chopped capers and dill, 1/2 tsp. salt and 1/2 tsp. each pepper, each minced parsley, chervil, chives (or burnet) and tarragon (or 1/2 tsp. each crushed dried herbs). Blend to a smooth paste.

Beat and blend in 4 tsp. olive oil, then 1 tsp. wine vinegar. Cover; refrigerate up to 2 weeks. Stir before using. Makes 1 1/2 cups.

Mixed fines herbs may be purchased in small jars and used in place of an assortment of fresh herbs in the above sauce and in many entrees and salads. In this case add 1 tsp. warm water to each teaspoon of mixed dried fines herbs, and steep 10 to 15 min. to soften and develop flavor. Do not drain; add the water and herbes together to the food being prepared; mix well.

SUNDAY DINNER

Hot jumbo asparagus, fines herbs sauce, roast leg of lamb, brown gravy, pan-roast potatoes, Bermuda onions, leg cream cup cakes, maple-almond sauce, coffee, tea or milk.

Ice cream cup cakes: For each person cut the top of a large uncut cup cake in 4 sections almost to the base. Fill with a scoop of vanilla or coffee ice cream. Top with hot maple-almond sauce.

Maple-almond sauce: Slow-melt 2 tsp. butter; in it saute 1/4 c. shredded blanched almonds until golden. Add 4 tsp. butter, 1/4 tsp. salt, 1/4 tsp. nutmeg and 1/4 c. pure maple syrup. Stir until butter melts. Half cool. Fold in 1/2 c. dairy sour cream. Use warm or chilled. Serves 6.

TOMORROW'S DINNER

Oyster steak in cups, broiled fish steaks, olive butter, french fried potatoes, broccoli, tapioca cream, frozen strawberry sauce, coffee, tea or milk.

The Chef's olive butter: Use for fish, veal or sandwiches made with poultry of any kind. To 1/4 lb. butter, blend in 2 tsp. minced stuffed olives or olive pieces and 1/4 tsp. lemon juice.

ELLEN'S DIARY

First Spring Outing Has Flavor & Zest For Party

"You won't be too long away?" James observed when a party comprised of the younger farmer, the two cooks and Alex, were about to leave the yard this morning on a first Spring outing to town.

"Not too long" the younger farmer commented in a firm note. Strange, we thought, how children can differ in their make up, though bone of bone and flesh of flesh and reared in the same atmosphere throughout. Even so, in characteristics how different they can be. And you catch glimpses in them entirely foreign to either parent, but definitely a throwback to others of their ancestry "removes" away.

We smiled. Not a bad voice, we decided, in these placating years—low but decisive. No hesitancy, no loophole of wavering. No rising inflections in tone. Yes, his grandfather's voice it was, that which was respected young and smartly in our girlhood home by the Strait. He, like other remembered heads of households of those days, ruled decidedly by though not unkindly—and indeed, by and large, admirably, their realms.

"We can't be too long" Jeanie chuckled tucking an extremely flat pocketbook in the odds and ends compartment of the machine.

"It's only that I shouldn't like to be left alone, is..." James nodded toward the piggy, then with a parting smile waved us away.

On his mother's knee, Alex was still and silent as we drove through the morning so pleasant. A bit awed, not because this was his first outing to town but now he was to absorb its meaning.

days of his babyhood past. "Do you remember how when Mack was his age, or may be a little older he would protest if on the way we passed an ice-cream store he recognized?" Jeanie smiled. "He would stand up and howl with disappointment!" "Town!" Alex smiled, when before long we entered the city breaking out now from its winter wrappings. How pleasant it will be there when Spring comes—truth to it, when the old trees leaf, and lawns green, and the first flowerings appear.

"We must remember to get mothballs" we said to Jeanie at the outset of our shopping "And... the teapot?" she chuckled aware that ours had failed us of late.

"Oh yes. And some white paint for the kitchen ceiling." "... the paint that doesn't yellow: That reminds me, I have to get white socks."

"... for Grandmother? And some small cooking pots—they're handier now. And, let's see..." "I'm afraid" Jeanie, smiled "we're not going to be able to get everything in and be home in time to welcome that first litter!"

Not quite in time, as it happened. We read that a glance when with mothballs and teapot and paint we got down from the machine at the door. In the sober look on James' face.

"Any there?" the younger farmer queried. James nodded. "But not all..." Now all can be counted. Milk teeth have been extracted there is a supply of reduced iron on hand—and all in all this has been a good day to us at Alderlea.

Until tomorrow—Diary—Good night.

The following article was prepared by Miss Carrie Holman for publication.

When George VI, Queen Elizabeth and the two Princesses were visiting in South Africa. Later when two of the leper girls were restored to health, Princess Elizabeth paid for their education.

MARY HAYWORTH

Engaged Girl Worries, Lacking Interest In Sex

Dear Mary Haworth: I am 19, and in love with a very wonderful young man, and we feel we are very compatible in most respects — except possibly in the most important of all.

I have practically no sex drive, while Jeff (I'll call him) has a great deal. This could be partially due to my home training. Is my age a factor? Surely not. We have talked to our pastor and I feel we got nowhere. Do you think a medical doctor could provide help? This is such a big problem to me. I realize the necessity of sex harmony for happy marriage.

I feel that I am normal; and Jeff feels the same about himself. I suppose it is only natural to feel that you are right and the fault is with the other. Yet the fact is, I don't even know what normal is—if there is a norm.

BETTER BREAK OFF?

If I lack this capacity for marriage I think I should break off now; but how is a girl supposed to know if she is capable of taking the pledge "for better, for worse," and make it turn out "for better?" The wrong step can mean a life time of unhappiness. Do most girls have such doubts and forebodings? I don't know if there are medical stimulants and depressants to help couples adjust; and probably would have scruples against such for myself, I think, I shall be most grateful to you for any suggestions or recommendations. E. K.

Dear E. K.: In his excellent book The Art of Loving (Harpers) analyst Erich Fromm calls attention to a popular fallacy in modern thinking to the effect that "love is the child of sexual pleasure, and if two people learn to satisfy each other sexually, they will love each other."

Dr. Fromm dryly notes that this idea has fitted into the general illusion of the times, namely the illusion that use of right techniques is the solution not only of technical problems of industrial production, but of all human relations as well.

He assures us that love is not the result of adequate sex satisfaction. On the contrary, sexual happiness is the result of love; and so, indeed, is even the knowledge of sexual artistry. SPECIALIST'S VIEW

He goes on to say that a study of the most frequent sexual problems — frigidity in women, and more or less severe forms of psychic impotence in men—show that the cause does not inhere in lack of "adjustment techniques," but in conditioned fear or hatred of the other sex. It is this emotional factor that prevents the person from giving himself completely, from acting spontaneously, from trusting the sex partner in the immediacy of physical closeness.

Speaking for the non-analytic view, Harvard's world-famed sociologist Pitirim Sorokin likewise warns against the current misguided tendency to "overvalue a mere sex appeal" and a knowledge of the physiology of sex relations, as the supposed key to marital success.

His concept of happy marriage is "two persons inspired by the same ideals, animated by the same important tasks, fully sharing their joys and sorrows, giving all their best to each other, thus united in one super-individual 'we' in life-enjoyment and creativity, and in service to each other, to their families, their community and humanity at large."

To get your bearings, study Dr. Alexander Magoun's book "Love and Marriage" (Harpers), a treasure trove of information, on "facts of life," you need to know. M. H.

OTTAWA (CP)—B. J. Farrell, director of administration for the post office department, said Tuesday that attempts are being made to stop the mailing of lottery tickets from The West Indies to Canada.

FOR SPRING

BREATH at the shoulders is one of the new sartorial signs of spring. It is seen here in this attractive black wool crepe, also available in navy. The sheath dress, along with its shoulder width, has short, set-in sleeves. It is topped by a white wool jacket with cape-type sleeves, contoured by seaming for added width. So fashion is really wearing her heart on her sleeve this season.
