CABLE AND TELEGRAPH

SOMETHING ABOUT THE NET-WORK OF WIRES AROUND THE WORLD.

How the Work First Got a Start in China—Getting a Line Across Australia—Description of the Work of Construction—Some of the Lines Now Operating.

It is commerce and competition which explain, as a rule, the extraordinary system of land and cable lines. They have been laid to meet the demands of business, and for the most part a business already assured. Not that there are no examples of that admirable daring which, forming a chance, makes its venture, preferring to create a demand rather than to follow one.

A remarkable case of just such a venture was the laying of the first cable along the Chinese shore in 1871.

Kussan had finished the land line across Siberia—the line which will be remembered, was intended to be part of the route so long projected into the United States by Bering Straits. But the American end of the project had failed, and she found that had an interminable stretch of line across her barren steppes and now had nothing to attach the end to. In fault of anything better to do with the straggling terminus, it was carried to Vladivostok.

The Northern Telegraph Company of Denmark saw the possibility of utilizing this end for European communication with China and Japan. Not that China and Japan had expressed any desire for such a line. They simply refused to ask permission, but slipped the land end of their cables into shore in offensive drain pipes, and quietly made their connections until they had a cable running from Hong Kong to Amoy, Gotzalf, Wooking, Nagasaki (Japan) and connecting with the land line at Vladivostok.

When the Chinese wakened up to the presence of the cable it was too late to object. They simply professed themselves utterly skeptical of its usefulness and refused to have anything to do with it. However, they soon had a practical demonstration of its capabilities. An Oriental, named Hoi, held the completed line, and acted on the price of rice; telegraphed down to Shanghai from Peking, and to buy up a quantity. He did so, and the price of the holders fell to unorthodox to trust to the impious Western contrivance which displaced him and space, two things which the Emperor Dragon himself had always respected, and they let their skepticism go so far that they sold their tickets for a song to more progressive gamblers. The next week the completed post arrived the report of the telegraph was confirmed. The new contrivance could not have had a more impressive advertisement.

The success of the Danish company in laying its cable along the coast induced it to try to extend the line to the westward, a successful beginning, but was stopped oddly enough. There are no burial grounds in China, each family making a sepulchre for its dead upon its own land. Dead ancestors are so revered that a shadow upon the grave is looked upon as an insult which must not be passed by. Now, when the Danes began to dig up the graves, the Chinese were so seriously interrupted for a time. However, the conversation of the telegraph became at last so evident to the Chinese that the Government decided to go on with the work; and since, even the shadows on the ancestors' tombs had not prevented the men from setting up poles.

It was the year before the Eastern Extension carried its cable to Hong Kong that the British Government, on condition that one or all of the colonies combined would lay a land line across the continent to meet it. The offer was accepted by the South Australian Government. This colony then numbered 120,000 inhabitants; it was in debt heavily for railroad and telegraph lines in the settled parts of its territory, but on heavily set aside the money for the new undertaking.

The work was begun early in 1870. The history of telegraph does not include another so dramatic chapter. All but 200 or 300 miles of the 2,000 from Adelaide on the South to Port Darwin, the cable terminus on the north, was through a land of either the worst reputation or utterly unknown, save from the reports of the one explorer who, after infinite risk and hardship, had traversed it nearly 20 years before.

The expedition was to be baffled by nothing, however. It carried every inch of its wire, most of its poles, all of its supplies, across a country often waterless and so hot that a thermometer burst and pork melted in the brine. The men saw their cattle die of hunger and thirst. They were forced literally to crawl through miles upon miles of scrub of the most exasperating character. The natives harassed them constantly, stealing their supplies, rigging up a line of spears and spears to use when the native boomerang were not up to the occasion, and threatening their finished work. The northern portion of the work was once abandoned, hopeless did it seem. Again terrific floods drove the expedition entirely from the field. In spite of the loss and discouragement, the line was finished in two years and a half, and after October 21, 1872, the London papers were publishing daily despatches from Australia. On November 15, 1872, a grand banquet was held in London, celebrating the completion of the work, and at it was read a telegram of thanks in respect to one of congratulation, which had been sent to Adelaide just two hours before.

"M. Casimir-Perier." President Casimir-Perier has a strongly developed jaw, a look of determination and something of the aggressive appearance of a bulldog. A clever caricaturist took advantage of the resemblance in appearance and name to portray him as "M. Casimir-Terrier," and the caricature has "caught on." Far from lowering him in the eyes of the public esteem, however, it has greatly increased his prestige as the uncompromising watchdog of the Republic.

No Use. "Kashem—Why don't you put a check to that fellow who is everlastingly dunning you?" "Bulker—What'd be the use? The bank wouldn't pay it—Buffalo Courier.

Serious Objection. She—Do you see any real objection to these living pictures. He—Yes, they always are given in houses not half big enough to hold the people anxious to see them.

A Prominent Lawyer Says: "I have eight children every one in good health, not one of whom has taken Scott's Emulsion, in which my wife has confidence."

"You say she is a musical genius so far as the piano is concerned?" "Yes; knows when to 'quit every time.'"

Consumption and lung troubles are the cause of fully one-third of the mortality in America. Prevention is better than cure. If you catch a cold, take at once some of Hawker's balsam of tolu and wild cherry. It is a sure cure.

SARAH BERNHARDT.

NOT ONLY THE GREATEST ACTRESS OF HER LAY BUT A WOMAN OF HIGH ATTAINMENT IN MANY OTHER BRANCHES OF ART.

Probably there is not a woman in the world to-day whose name is more familiar than that of Sarah Bernhardt; she needs no introduction to the "American" people, therefore, we will simply quote what she has written about "Vin Mariani." "I have been delighted to read 'Vin Mariani' in all the large cities of the United States, and I think, as always, largely helped to give me that strength so necessary in the performance of the arduous duties which I have imposed upon myself. I never fail to praise its virtues to all my friends, and I heartily congratulate you upon the success which you so well deserve."

Dr. Cyrus Edson, chief of Health Department, New York, says that in case of influenza (La Grippe) where patients suffer with high fever and extreme headache, the most effective remedy is the generous dilutable tincture "Vin Mariani." All grocers and druggists keep it, but if you do not find it at your dealer, write direct to Lawrence A. Wilson & Co., Montreal, and if you enclose a stamp for postage you will receive an album containing the photographs of many celebrities who have testified to the excellence of "Vin Mariani."

Late news from the Lower St. Lawrence says that the north and south shores are covered with snow and several schooners have been reported lost during last week's storm.

It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Consumption—Low Condition

Wonderful Results From Taking Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Miss Hannah Wyatt, Toronto, Ont.

"Four years ago while in the old country (England), my daughter Hannah was sent away from the hospital, in a very low condition with consumption of the lungs and bowels, and weak action of the heart. The trip across the water to this country seemed to make her feel better for a while. Then she began to get worse, and for 14 weeks she was unable to get off the bed. She grew worse for five months and lost the use of her limbs and lower part of body, and if she sat up in bed had to be propped up with pillows. Physicians

Said She Was Past All Help and wanted me to send her to the 'Homes for Invalids.' But I said as long as I could hold my hand up she should not go. We then began
