returned the six of diamonds, the was finessed, and the king was cashed, declarer discarding two clubs. South still had to lose two club tricks and went down one.

At Table 2, when the heart was led back at trick two, declarer ruffed and played A-K of spades. He next played the three of diamonds towards dummy.

West found himself faced with an impossible choice. Whatever he did, declarer was bound to make the contract. If he ducked the diamond, dummy's king would win the trick and the king of hearts would permit declarer to discard the queen of diamonds. South could afford to lose two club tricks, since he could trump his other two clubs in dummy to make the hand. Declarer's losers, in all, would be a heart and two clubs.

If West chose to go up with the ace of diamonds when the three was led, South would then make four spades in a different fashion. Assume, after West takes the diamond ace, he returns a heart. Declarer wins in dummy, discarding a club.

South enters his hand with the queen of diamonds, crosses to dummy with a trump, and discards two more clubs on the K-10 of diamonds when the jack luckily drops on the king. On this defense, South ends losing a heart, a diamond, and a club.

Opening lead—ten of hearts. This hand was played a good many years ago in a team of four match. The bidding was identical at both tables. The same opening lead was made in each case, and after the queen of hearts lost to the ace, the three of hearts was returned by both Easts.

From this point on, the play varied. At Table 1, declarer won the heart in dummy, discarding a low diamond, and ruffed a heart return.

South then cashed the spade ace and entered dummy with the ten of spades. A low diamond to the queen lost to the ace. West

Zero Gravity Is Greatest Problem To Space-Age Man

By STEVE LOWELL
ALAMOGORDO, N.M. (AP)—The prime space-age problem can be posed in five letters. It's zero-G.

Zero-G means no gravity. When man gets far into space, away from the earth's pull, he will weigh nothing.

Colonel John Paul Stapp puts it this way: "We must find out how well man can change gravity climates. A 150-pound man on earth would weigh 25 pounds in the moon, but during his flight from the earth he would weigh nothing.

"There is no way to experiment with prolonged absence of gravity except with an orbital satellite research vehicle. We can learn a good deal with animals, but eventually we will need man to experiment with total weightlessness."

MANNED SATELLITE

Putting it another way, the first step to the moon—go to anywhere in outer space—will be a manned satellite. Then, says Stapp, it will be a space platform.

The next probability, he believes, would be a moon landing and exploration—"and that is about as far as we can conjecture at this time."

Stapp is head of the aero-military laboratory at the air force missile test centre here. Next month he goes to Dayton to take over a similar laboratory at the big air base there.

A 47-year-old physician, Stapp first won fame in 1954. Then he travelled 632 miles in an hour on a rocket sled designed to test whether a human could survive the jarring starts and stops of a rocket into space.

Weightlessness can occur for a fraction of a second when you drive at fairly high speed over a comparatively sharp rise in a highway. As the car clears the bump and starts down the other side, your body rises for an instant off the car seat. Roller coaster riders know the same feeling.

WEIGHTLESS PILOT

Capt. Joe Kittinger is an air force pilot who has done considerable experimenting in weightlessness. He also has taken a balloon up 95,000 feet to test human reactions to high altitudes.

Kittinger will climb to 70,000 feet, level off, fly at top speed, then put the plane into a climbing angle of about 70 degrees, dash the stick ahead and go over the same sort of hump that a roller coaster rider would.

Anything not fastened down goes to the top of the canopy above his head. So would he, if his seat belt didn't hold him.

But the longest Kittinger has been able to maintain this weightlessness is 35 seconds. That's not long enough, says another captain who won a Ph.D. with a thesis on weightlessness.

Capt. Grover J. D. Schack of the missile centre space biology branch says: "Long-term exposure is something we know very little about."

Schack has made many flights with Kittinger. He has found that man can't eat or drink in the usual way while he is in zero-G.

Open containers just don't work. Squeeze bottles or tubes will. Water won't flow. It will roll out of an ordinary glass and be suspended on globules. To get a drink, you splash it into your mouth.

Put a peanut in your mouth and it's apt to float back out.

"An ordinary meal would be all over the cockpit," he says.

An exhaled puff of smoke would remain where it is. There are no air currents, and no gas is heavier than another. A man might sit in his own cloud of exhaled carbon dioxide and gradually asphyxiate himself.

DEPENDS ON FLUID

Man depends for balance on fluid in a curled little tube inside his ears. When he stands, the fluid is at the bottom. When he lies down, the fluid moves, and tells him the position of his head.

Gravity keeps the fluid down, so man knows even when he's upside down.

But in zero-G, there is no force to do the job. What is the answer? Schack thinks it lies in instruments.

In instrument flying during bad weather, pilots must learn to trust the instruments completely. They are told to forget about flying "by the seat of the pants." A plane's instruments may show an aircraft turning to the right, but man's complex nervous system may make him feel it's level.

Pilots have learned to trust instruments, and he believes man's adjustment to space will come in the same way.
