EQUINE HISTORY.

In Christian art the horse symbolizes goodness and generosity.

It is said by competent persons that over 100,000 horses are every year killed for food in Paris.

Assyrian monumental records show that cavalry and war chariots were used at least 2,500 years before Christ.

Arabian horses were introduced into Europe during the crusades, the Barbary horses during the Moorish occupation of Spain.

The most famous horse in Spanish literature was Don Quixote's Rosinante, and the most famous donkey Sancho's Panza's Dapple.

During the most heavily armored period of warfare all evolutions requiring celerity were executed by infantry, the cavalry being the slow moving arm of the service.

As early as the time of Julius Caesar, 54 B. C., British horses were famous for their size and strength. In his writings Caesar mentions them as exceeding in most particulars those of the continent.

Most Christian readers will be surprised to learn that the archangel Gabriel is provided with a steed named Haizum. To Mohammed, in the Koran, is due the credit of mounting Gabriel in good style.

The standard of the Saxons was a white horse. It is worthy of note that the hair of the Saxon woman was not red, but yellow; therefore the joke about the redheaded girl and the white horse, though ancient, is of later date than the eighth century.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Salt Butter Uniformly.

Some butter receivers are complaining that the consignments of butter, even from first class creameries, vary widely in the amount of salt used, some being nearly fresh and some so salty as to be almost unpalatable, all in the same shipment too. This is an old complaint against dairy butter, but it is surprising to find that any creamery should send out such goods. It is supposed that everything is done by weight and measure, and that such variations are impossible. It is evident that some butter maker needs stirring up. Such haphazard practices will never do. If they be persisted in, creamery butter will lose its prestige.

JERSEY WORTH HAVING.

Yield of Six Per Cent Butter Fat and a Big Calf.

Here is a famous old Jersey cow, imported originally from the island which is the native home of Jerseys. She has never been forced for a record, but has been one of the best cows straight through her career ever owned in private life. When she was 18 years old, her milk yielded 6 per cent butter fat to the test.

A writer in The Rural New Yorker, from which paper the illustration is reproduced, says of the old herd mother: This photograph was taken when her calf was about 3 weeks old, and the cow was not looking as well as usual, having fallen away somewhat in flesh after giving birth to her calf, which was a very large, vigorous young fellow. At this time the mother was giving on an average about 25 pounds of milk daily, testing 6 per cent butter fat. Although very nearly 18 years old at that time, she is a valuable dairy cow even yet. The next time a man tells you that he is afraid to feed his cows heavily because he thinks that they will last only a short time under this treatment just call his attention to old Cypres, who has stood heavy feeding for nearly 19 years, and today her udder and teats are in as perfect condition as when she was a heifer. As long as you are able to milk it out don't be afraid to put the feed into a dairy cow.

Whey Calves and Other Calves.

For a number of years we raised 10 to 25 calves every year. We sold our milk to the cheese factory and had our whey back. This problem of raising good calves on whey was a serious one. We always started our calves on new milk till they were 3 or 4 weeks old, then gradually diminished the milk and added a little whey, and at the end of a week the whey would be substituted for the milk and no bad results from the change, as is often the case when the change is made abruptly. But to make up for the loss of the milk we boiled a kettleful of old process oilmeal, adding a little of this to each feed.

They would thrive nicely on this till hot weather came on, when the whey would get too sour for calves.

This dilemma, confronted us several times. At last we decided the whey must go, and we adopted a new system, which proved a success. We made hay tea by taking an old washboiler and crowding it full of sweet clover hay, then pouring boiling water over it and covering up to steep. When the new milk was taken away from them, at the age of 3 or 4 weeks, a little of this tea and also a little of the cooked oilmeal was given each calf. By thinning with water the desired amount of drink was obtained. This was increased as they got older, and also a little bran added.

At the start the quantity of oilmeal to be used is at the rate of two table-spoonfuls to each calf. At the age of 3 months the hay tea may be omitted, as the calves will then be old enough to eat plenty of grass, but they should be on good pasture.

The cooked oilmeal and bran should be given them all summer by thinning it as a drink with water. It should be measured, not guessed at, and each one fed in a pail separately. We wish to emphasize the word "cooked," for if fed in its raw state it is liable to scour the calves, while if cooked it will not, hence very important. This hay after being steeped is not altogether wasted, for horses and cattle will eat it more greedily than in its dry state, though it is true much of its strength is exhausted.—Exchange.

Question and Answer.

If I skim with separator a pound of cream from each 6 pounds of milk that tested 4 per cent butter fat, what per cent of fat should the cream show in Babcock test? Why should it not show six times 4 per cent, or 24 per cent?

Answer.—It should, barring the inevitable loss, and this is frequently larger than is supposed. A separator needs constant watching, just like any other high speeded machine. The loss in the skim-milk ought not to exceed one-tenth of 1 per cent, but is quite frequently more than twice that. In the case cited, if the skim-milk contained two-tenths of 1 per cent fat, the cream would not test quite 28 per cent.—Hoard's Dairyman.
