

Offensive Forces In U.S. Said More Than Adequate

WASHINGTON (AP) — Defence Secretary Robert S. McNamara has described planned United States strategic offensive forces as far more than adequate to cope with any Soviet first strike.

The strategic missile force recommended for the 1967-71 period will provide "substantially more force than is required for an assured destruction capability against both the Soviet Union and Communist China," he said here.

Washington (AP) — Defence Secretary Robert S. McNamara said it is clear that our strategic offensive forces are far more than adequate to inflict unacceptable damage on the Soviet Union even after absorbing a well-coordinated Soviet first strike against these forces.

Indeed, it appears that even a relatively small portion of those forces would furnish us with a completely adequate deterrent to a deliberate Soviet nuclear attack on the United States and its allies.

While speaking of missiles, McNamara said that manned bombers must be considered as a supplementary role.

He prepared his remarks for a closed session of a House of Representatives subcommittee which is investigating McNamara's plan for a further reduction of the strategic bomber force. Excerpts

Telephone Additions Can Aid Deaf Persons, Semi-Mutes

MONTREAL (CP) — Specialized and little-known additions to the common telephone are available to allow many deaf persons to hear and enable semi-mutes to talk on the telephone.

The inventor of the telephone, Alexander Graham Bell, studied sound, and its opposite, the silent world of the deaf, in developing his invention.

His concern with deafness was all the more acute as both his wife and mother were victims of deafness.

The telephone industry has continued to study hearing and speech disabilities with the result that there now are available devices that enable many deaf or mute persons to communicate on the telephone.

In Canada alone there are an estimated 100,000 totally deaf, 400,000 partially deaf and 100,000 with speech deficiencies.

Among the instruments available for these persons is an "impaired hearing handset," with an amplifier and a volume control knob which can in many cases be turned up high enough to enable the partially deaf to hear.

An offshoot of this invention is the "noisy location handset" with a pushbutton that amplifies sound volume to overcome background noise.

A "weak-speech handset" is also available for those who cannot bring their voices up to the volume needed to communicate. Here, the outgoing voice is amplified. A less powerful version of this device is available to those who need to make secret, whispered conversations.

There is a "bone conduction receiver handset" designed to aid people who have lost the capacity to hear by normal air conduction. This instrument picks up the sound vibrations which the ear is not able to catch and conducts them to the inner hearing mechanism through the skull bones.

A "watch case receiver"—a second tiny receiver attached to a telephone—enables a third person to monitor a telephone conversation and repeat what is being said on the other end of the line. Thus a victim of deafness can lip-read.

The ring of a telephone is not the only signal for an incoming telephone call. A lamp can be lit for the benefit of the deaf and a fan can be set into operation in the case of those who are both deaf and blind.

All the devices have been made available by Bell Telephone Co. of Canada Ltd.

Another device available from Bell, even though it is not used only for telephone conversations, is the artificial larynx, an electronic device for people whose larynx has been removed, or whose vocal cords have become paralyzed. It is placed against the side of the throat and produces the sound formerly made by the larynx.

The picture phone, similar in principle to closed-circuit television and allowing the transmission of images as well as voice, was launched commercially but on a limited basis in 1964 between New York, Chicago and Washington. This system, when made commercially available in large numbers, could be used by deaf mutes, who communicate by lip-reading.

Cemetery Ban Ordered For U.S. Veteran

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. defence department has barred convicted Communist party leader Robert G. Thompson, a decorated veteran of the Second World War, from burial in Arlington National Cemetery.

The action was disclosed in a terse statement which said: "The decision followed a review of the facts, including an opinion of the attorney-general of the United States."

The Pentagon said Thompson, who won the distinguished service cross for valor in the New Guinea campaign, "will not be interred in Arlington cemetery."

Disclosure last week by Thompson's wife that the Communist leader would be buried in Arlington on Jan. 31 caused a wave of protests from veterans organizations and individuals.

Thompson died last October at the age of 50. He was cremated and his ashes were to be interred in Arlington.

Thompson was a member of the Communist Party, USA, and was convicted of espionage in 1951. He was sentenced to 30 years in prison but was released in 1955 on parole.
