

the summer and over the Christmas break. That's when they check for damages too. Each residence has an overnight security guard at the front desk and the head resident in each building is responsible for what's happening in the dorms." Mike Read says, "The bottom line is the rooms in residence are the students' private space."

In a television interview, President Eliot described certain feelings about the security in residence. He says, "I guess we've got to look into what we do to make sure there aren't little arsenals here and there. ... Privacy to me is terribly important. I want it for myself. My children want it for themselves, and I want it for our students, and I just don't want to interfere with their privacy. ... But we have to ask ourselves 'At what point does the public good become more important than the private?'"
