Prison

(Continued from page 1) tea was on dope during the interview and was unable to express himself. He could not identify the type of narcotics the prisoners were using from the dispensary.

The young sociologist had another role inside the convict-held prison: That of unofficial advisor to the hostage group. He warned them to be prepared for the snap whims of the real convict leader, Jerry Myles, who he described as a 44-year-old braggart and the institution's worst homosexual.

"One thing about Myles" Jones remarked, "he was psychotic and loved authority and attention; but I think he was sincere in wanting to bring about segregation of young first offenders."

Yet, Jones said, it was the same youngsters, the 18 and 19 year olds, that Myles molested in homosexual advances.

"It was for this reason that Myles hated me," Jones commented. "As soon as a prisoner was brought in, I warned him to avoid Myles, a six-time loser from Butte."

TRIED TO BARTER
Jones said that after the reporters left, Alton tried to sell Myles on the release of the hostages in return for news stories listing their grievances.

"I could handle Alton, Jones said. "But he lost control of Myles." The plan failed and Myles refused to let the hostages go.

Late Friday afternoon, the convicts again let Jones out of the prison to take their offer to compromise the situation to authorities.

This time, however, Warden Floyd Powell would not let Jones return to the convicts.

This meant freedom for Jones but left him with the worry of what effect his failure to return might have on the convicts.

15 Killed In Revolt

LA PAZ, Bolivia (AP) — A revolt broke out in La Paz early Sunday but the government said shortly after noon it had the situation under control.

Authorities said 15 persons were killed and more than 30 were wounded in the uprising.

The government said the Socialist Falange party headed the revolt and reported one of the party leaders had been captured. He was identified as Rafael Loayza, a retired colonel.

A GOOD OMEN
The crowds of buddhists who had been flocking into this town for days greeted him wildly. A light rain stopped as the party approached. The sun pepped out from behind the clouds. Tibetans called this a good omen.

The jeep caravan, which had been sent out by the Indian government to meet the Dalai Lama and his party of 80 wound through the streets to the Tezpur District House, a public building.

The Dalai Lama stood under a shade of bamboo as his spokesman read the 1,000-word statement. The statement was far stronger than Indian officials had expected. It appeared likely to make difficult Prime Minister Nehru's intention of maintaining friendly relations with Peiping

17-POINT AGREEMENT

"In 1951, under pressure of the (Red) Chinese government, a 17-point agreement was made between China and Tibet," it said.

"In that agreement, the suzerainty of China was accepted, as there was no alternative left to the Tibetans. But even in the agreement it was stated that Tibet would enjoy full autonomy (local rule.)"

But the Chinese Communist disregarded the pledge, interfered in Tibetan religious and internal affairs, and at the end of 1955 the fierce Khampa tribesmen rebelled.

"In the subsequent struggle," the statement continued, "the Chinese armed forces destroyed a large number of monasteries. Many lamas (holy men) were killed and a large number of monks and officials were taken and employed in the construction of roads in China, and the interference in the exercise of religious freedom increased."
