The Chicago Tribune says that the New York banks owe the Treasury $45,000,000, which they are unable to pay just now. It recommends, on account of the scarcity of money, that the New York banks borrow money in London on the security of United States bonds. The Daily News of the same place calls attention to the fact that Mr. Sherman has five times as much as that amount lying idle in the Treasury, and thinks it would be a better financial operation to borrow it of him on the deposit of bonds than to be paying foreigners interest on their credit, because it is credit not money the New York bankers would borrow in London.
