Japan and Canada Sued For Marriage For Economic Field

Canada and Japan are natural trading partners but the Japanese are disturbed because they sell so much to Canada that they buy Canadian Press reporter who has talked with Japanese officials tells why in this story.

By Dave Stockand
TOKYO (CP)—The eager Canadian exporter sees Japan as a country for conquest one that devours raw materials and foodstuffs with the appetite of an American vulture.

The Japanese manufacturer, whether he is producing transistor units or huge turbines, or maybe both, looks at Canada as an ideal outlet for the finished goods his country must export abroad to survive as an industrial power.

An ideal marriage of complementary economies? In many ways it is.

One side is Canada with its abundance of minerals and products of forest and farm. On the other side is Japan with its 85,000,000 people to feed, its mass-production techniques and its enormous pool of skilled labor.

But even ideal marriages have their ills, and they can't get out of hand if one partner sits sulking on a tatami mat while the other lounges lazily on a Western-style sofa.

The Japanese aren't sulking, far from it, but they do find their position isn't fully understood by Canadians. Canada also has a warped picture of Japan. In regard to some Japanese practices.

Trade figures are the big bludgeon in the Japanese arsenal of argument.

Canada is 1962 exported to Japan goods worth $215,000,000 and in return took imports valued at $125,000,000—ending up $90,000,000 to the good in the balance-of-trade sheet.

These figures are tallied by Canada's statisticians. The Japanese, by their reckoning, ended up the trade year more than $140,000,000 in the red in dealing with Canada.

The fundamental problem of Japan, which was far down the world's natural resources, is to finance through exports the importation of raw materials needed for industrial expansion and economic progress.

Japan is the world's largest producer of ships, rayon staple, value equipment, cars and motorcycles. It is the second largest producer of synthetic fiber and has a large and redoubtable export of steel.

Canada for its part has no objections to a narrowing of the Japanese trade deficit through increased imports from Japan provided this takes place without disruption of Canadian industry.

There is no doubt Canada is dealing with a giant still far from full strength.

Japan is the world's largest producer of ships, rayon staple, value equipment, cars and motorcycles. It is the second largest producer of synthetic fiber and has a large and redoubtable export of steel.

Canada for its part has no objections to a narrowing of the Japanese trade deficit through increased imports from Japan provided this takes place without disruption of Canadian industry.

United Front Said Need At H-S

Greater parent-teacher co-operation is getting better. It is the way a trading firm official put it.

The Canada-Japan Council, an association of firms interested in expanding Japanese-Canadian trade, makes this prediction on two-way trade potentially based on Japan's plans to double the gross national income.

"Canada could expand its sales to Japan to $436,000,000 by 1970, mostly in the raw material field. Japan's sales to Canada by 1970 could reach $382,500,000, mainly in the finished products field."

But to make the prediction come true will require sharp

RIPLEY'S BELIEVE IT OR NOT

Canada also is critical of a Japanese tendency to hamstring potential Canadian exports of fully manufactured goods by intricate trade restrictions and other devices once quantitative restrictions are removed.

There is a said one Canadian source "widespread suspicion that Japan's domestic industry could be a serious competitor than it is subjected to."

The fact remains that Canadian-Japanese trade increased tenfold in the years 1950-62.

Japan is a big customer of Canada's export products. Canada is Japan's sixth-best market.

Both countries are working hard to erase existing frictions.

Japanese exporters, speaking through the country's great trading firms, say they can avoid damaging Canada's domestic producers—while selling more through a greater diversification of exports coupled with increased voluntary quotas, such as they dislike the latter.

Canada for its part has no objections to a narrowing of the Japanese trade deficit through increased imports from Japan provided this takes place without disruption of Canadian industry.
