THE PIRATE.

By Sir Walter Scott.
CHAPTER XXVIII.
The witch then raised her wither'd arm,
And waved her wand on high,
And, while she spoke the mutter'd charm, Dark lightning flid her eye.
MICKADO.
"This should be the stair," said the Udaller, blundering in the dark against some steps of irregular ascent. "This should be the stair, unless my memory greatly fail me; and there she sits," he added, as he paused at a half open door, "with all her tackle about her as usual, and so puss, dumbless as the devil in a gale of wind." As he made his reluctant comparison, he entered, followed by his daughter, the darkened apartment in which Norna was seated, amidst a confused collection of books of various languages, parchment scrolls, tablets and stones inscribed, with the angular characters of the Runic alphabet, and similar articles, which the vulgar might have connected with the exercise of the forbidden arts.
There were also lying in the chamber, or hung over the rude or ill contrived chimney, an old shirt of mail, with the headpiece, battle-axe and lance, which had once belonged to it; and on a shelf were disposed, in great order, several of those curious stone axes, formed of green granite, which are often found in these islands, where they are called thunderbolts by the common people, who usually preserve them as a charm of security against the effects of lightning. There was, moreover, to be seen amid the strange collection, a stone sacred knife, used perhaps for immolating human victims, and one or two of the brazen implements called Celts, the purpose of which has troubled the repose of so many antiquaries.
A variety of other articles, some of which had neither name nor were capable of description, lay in confusion about the apartment; and in one corner, on a quantity of withered sea-weed, reposed what seemed, at first view, to be a large unshapely dog, but, when seen more closely, proved to be a tame seal, which it had been Norna's amusement to domesticate.
This uncouth favorite bristled up in its corner, upon the arrival of so many strangers, with an air almost similar to that which a ferocious dog would have displayed on a similar occasion; but Norna remained motionless, seated behind a table of rough granite, propped up by misshapen feet of the same material, which, beside the old book with which she seemed to be busied, sustained a cake of the coarse unleavened bread, three parts oatmeal, and one the saddest of fir, which is used by the peasants of Norway, beside which stood a jar of water.
Magnus Troil remained a minute in silence gazing upon his kinswoman, while the singularity of her mansion inspired Brenda with much fear, and changed, though but for a moment, the melancholy and abstracted mood of Minna, into a feeling of interest, not unmixed with awe. The silence was interrupted by the Udaller, who, unwillingly on the one hand to give his kinswoman offence, and desirous on the other to show that he was not debauched by a reception so singular, opened the conversation thus:— "I give you good even, cousin Norna—my daughters and I have come far to see you." Norna raised her eyes from her volume, looked full at her visitors, then let them quietly sit down on the leaf with which she seemed to be engaged.
"Nay, cousin," said Magnus, "take your own time—our business with you can wait your leisure. See here, Minna, what a fair prospect here is of the cape, scarce a quarter of a mile off! You may see the billows breaking on it topmast high. Our kinswoman has got a pretty seal, too. Here, sealchie, my man, when, when?"
The seal took no farther notice of the Udal-ler's advances to acquaintance, than by uttering a low growl.
"He is not so well trained," continued the Udaller, affecting an air of ease and unconcern, "as Peter McKaw's, the old piper of Stornoway, who had a seal that flapped its tail to the tune of Caberfae, and acknowledged no other whatever. Well, cousin," he concluded, observing that Norna closed her book, "are you going to give us a welcome at last, or must we go farther than our blood-relation's house to seek one, and that when the evening is wearing late apace?"
"Ye dull and hard-hearted generation, as deaf as the adder to the voice of the charmer," answered Norna, addressing them, "why come ye to me? You have slighted every warning I could give of the coming harm, and now that it hath come upon you, ye seek my counsel when it can avail you nothing."
"Look you, kinswoman," said the Udaller, with his usual frankness, and boldness of manner and accent, "I must needs tell you that your courtesy is sometimes of the coarsest and the coldest. I cannot say that I ever saw an adder, in regard there are none in these parts; but touching my own thoughts of what such a thing may be, it cannot be termed a suitable compensation to me or to my daughters, and that I would have you to know. For old acquaintance, and certain other reasons, I do not leave your house upon the instant; but as I came lither in all kindness and civility, so I pray you to receive me with the like, otherwise we will depart, and leave shame on your inhospitable threshold."
"How!" said Norna, "dare you use such bold language in the house of one from whom all men—from whom you yourself—come to solicit counsel and aid? They who speak to the Reimkennar must lower their voice to her before whom winds and waves hush both blast and billow."
"Blast and billow may hush themselves if they will," replied the peremptory Udaller, "but that will not I. I speak in the house of my friend as in my own, and strike sail to none."
"And none ye," said Norna, "by this rudeness to compel me to answer to your interrogatories?"
"Kinswomen," replied Magnus Troil, "I know not as much as ye, you of the old Norse sagas; but this I know, that when kemples were wont, long since, to seek the habitations of the gall-dragns and spae-women, they came with their axes on their shoulders, and their good swords drawn in their hands, and compelled the power whom they invoked to listen to and answer them, ay, were it Odin himself."
"Kinsman," said Norna, arising from her seat, and coming forward, "thou hast spoken well, and in good time for thyself and thy daughters; for hadst thou turned from my threshold without exporting an answer, morning's sun had never again shone upon you.
The spirits who serve me are jealous, and will not be employed in aught that may benefit humanity, unless their service is commended by the undoubted importance of the brave and the free. And now speak, what wouldst thou have of me?"
"My daughter's health," replied Magnus,
"which no remedies have been able to restore."
"Thy daughter's health?" answered Norna; "and what is the maidens ailment?"
"The physicians," said Troil, "must name the disease. All that I can tell thee of it is—"
"Be silent," said Norna, interrupting him, "I know all thou canst tell me, and more than thou thyself knowest. Sit down, all of you—and thou, maiden," she said, addressing Minna, "sit thou in that chair," pointing to the place she had just left, "once the seat of Glettrab, at whose voice the stars hid their beams, and the moon herself grew pale."
Minna moved with slow and tremulous step towards the rude seat thus indicated to her. It was composed of stone, formed into some semblance of a chair by the rough and unskilful hand of some ancient Gothic artist.

Funerals Cost Too Much.
The New York clergymen have completed the organization of the Burial Reform Association. Its motto is the scriptural passage: "Not to be sorry as men without hope for them that sleep in Him." The project of the association is to unite all who profess and call themselves Christians to a three-fold effort:
First—To encourage burial in perishable coffins in the simple earth.
Second—To simplify and cheapen funeral and mourning ceremonies.
Third—To secure large and ample tracts of suitable ground for burial purposes.
The association will seek to advance its objects by urging the following specific reforms:—
First—The exercise of economy and simplicity in everything appertaining to the funeral.
Second—The use of plain hearse.
Third—The disuse of crapes, scarfs, feathers, velvet trappings and the like.
Fourth—The avoiding of all unchristian and heathen emblems and the use of any floral decorations beyond a few cut flowers.
Fifth—The discouraging of all eating and drinking in connection with funerals.
Sixth—The discouraging of any but immediate members of the family accompanying the body to the grave.
Seventh—The dispensing of the idea that all club or society money must be spent on the funeral.
Eighth—The early interment of the body in soil sufficient and suitable for its dissolution to its ultimate element.
Ninth—The use of such materials for the coffin as will rapidly decay after burial.
Tenth—The encouragement, on sanitary grounds, of the removal in crowded districts of the body to a mortuary instead of retaining it in a room occupied by the living; and eleventh—The pressing upon officers of public charities and correction the claim of the poorest to proper and reverent burial.
Bishop Potter of New York is the President of the association and it remains to be seen how great a reform will be accomplished.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.—Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup should always be used when children are cutting teeth. It relieves the little sufferer at once; it produces natural quiet sleep by relieving the child from pain; and the little cherub awakes as "bright as a button." It is very pleasant to taste. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, regulates the bowels, and is the best known remedy for diarrhoea, whether arising from teething or other causes. Twenty-five cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for Mrs.
Winslow's Soothing Syrup, and take no other kind.
