This Ottawa meter maid had a hard decision to make, but she did and stuck to the letter of the law. For a moment she appears to be ignoring the city police cruiser parked at the expired meter (left) but she returns (centre) and duly writes out a ticket and affixes it to the windshield. (CP Wirephoto)

ELLEN'S DIARY

The Two Lads Enjoyed A Spell On The Swing

The swallows have not yet come back to the eaves. The robins' nest in the white birch is still vacant. But today a pair of lads, each taking his turn on it, came to enjoy a spell on the rope swing which hangs from its branches. The sun lent his warm blessing, and smiles wreathed young faces. Summery days were warranted in this nice glimpse of them given today. Peter, pleased to be a cowboy in his waiting, threw a lasso once, which caught neatly Alex's out-stretched feet, to delay the sport for a time, Scampie coming by to join in the fun.

Sunshine, light wind, increasing patches of blue in the fields, this was another pleasant March day. "It's spring-like" a farmer who had stopped by commented. "It is," James agreed smiling. "However, we can plan for two months of stable-feeding yet-give or take a few days either way." "We can that," the other said. The little truck came to the yards and backed to a granary door. "Mill-feed?" the visitor queried. "Some, to help out!" James nodded.

The seven days of this week, but did ever a week before this, pass so soon? Or so all in all pleasantly at this farm? It completed again, with the girl-student's return for a holiday from classes, the family circle in the house across the land. It brought Peter, her youngest brother from several days of confinement indoors because of a young misery, to the delight of the outdoors again.

Excursions were enjoyed, by machine and on foot. How light are footsteps on the crust the frosts of the March nights stiffen on the drifts, to make for us a favorite pavement! We remember too, because how precious these are to this household, the coziness about the fire, with night starry and so peaceful at the windows, when other members of the family come by to join us or visitors to talk of many things. Farmers to speak of the interests of the season: the wood-splitting, the marketings which must be, "to contend with the overhead which now on farms is more or less alarming", and to talk of the spring work ahead. Women to tell of their winter's handicraft: the sewings - the new quilts made, the hooked rugs, all of which give so much for so little - so much beauty from bits and pieces of clippings, from the discards of garments that were the "hooking rags."

A pleasant week this has been, though not without its momentary problems, its frustrations, and discouragements, and the little and larger ills which are the lot of humans everywhere along Life's unpredictable road. Then it is we do well to remember, "It isn't the kind of a road that counts. Whether smooth or rocky or steep: If we follow the star of faith and love. Our footsteps, He'll guide and keep. He'll make the rough way even. He'll lower the lofty hills, The shadow of night will fade from sight. If we walk the way that He wills." Until Monday - - - Diary - - - Good-night.

We are not moralists, but any reputable and successful furniture dealer or decorator knows that it is a matter of good business to be truthful in dealing with his customers.

The meeting was closed with the Act of Consecration read by the director, Rev. Louis Callaghan, and refreshments were served by the hostess and committee.

Occasionally there are furniture dealers who are apt to make exaggerated statements in their advertising or to their customers concerning price reductions or the quality of the goods they are offering; but, these dealers learn that these mis-statements eventually hurt only themselves and bring about not only the loss of the sale but the loss of the good customer as well.

A total of 16 members answered roll call, and the treasurer's report was given. Donations were voted for the Murray Christian Education Centre in Kensington.

Some salesmen, in their desire to make the sale, are inclined to "oversell" the item. Some of them think this to be a form of salesmanship. They are only fooling themselves if they make any statement, claim or guarantee which they know cannot be kept.

The next meeting is to be held at the home of Mrs. Elmer Stewart when she will be devotional leader. Mrs. Crawford Sinclair will be in charge of the study period and each member was requested to bring a card for the community friendship secretary.

If it takes 8 to 10 weeks for a factory to make a certain sofa or chair in a selected fabric, it is best to tell this to the customer. Most of them will be patient and wait the required time in order to get exactly what they want.

During the social hour, refreshments were served by the hostess assisted by Mrs. Harland Day.

This truthfulness is the very element which creates the atmosphere of integrity in any business and the reputation for honesty without which no business can succeed.
