Send Bones of Giant Mastodon
SAINT JOHN, N.B. July 28.—(CP)—Mastodon bones weighing hundreds of pounds, the first found in New Brunswick, are being prepared for display in the New Brunswick Museum. They were brought here from the scene of discovery at Hillsboro, Albert County.
The five-foot tusks, an immense jawbone, part of a skull, two five-inch teeth and many small bones were unearthed during excavation work on the estate of Conrad J. Osman. Cost of reconstructing the skeleton in a standing position is beyond the museum's finances, so the bones will be arranged in proper sequence and displayed in a large showcase.
Identification of the remains was established by Dr. William Macintosh, the museum director. Low-crowned teeth and an elongated skull partly distinguished mastodons from later species of the elephant family.
Keen interest also was aroused by discovery of petrified intestinal residue and a piece of wood beneath the bones. Microscopic examination was expected to reveal the nature of the shrubby vegetation forming mastodons' diet. Apparent teeth marks in the wood occasioned speculation that monster beavers inhabited New Brunswick in prehistoric times.
Leakage of an artificial lake on the Osman estate led indirectly to the important scientific discovery. Can. formed the lake some years ago by damming a small stream. The water seeped through an underground passage, however, and he sought the aid of his father-in-law, C. R. Fancey, a civil engineer, in an attempt to block the passage. This necessitated excavation on the upper side of the dam.
In a bed of blue clay about nine feet under the earth's surface the workmen uncovered what seemed to be a peculiarly shaped rock. One of them started to toss it aside when Fancey scrutinized the object and found it was bone.
"I knew then that it was some kind of prehistoric monster," he said later. "I knew no animal in the province today had horns that big."
Clay had preserved the bones since the pleistocene age, when glaciers covered the continent and created the Great Lakes. Before their removal to Saint John the remains were protected by wet sacking. Careful guard against souvenir hunters was maintained after someone stole a fragment of one of the tusks.
Theorizing about the mastodon's death, the Macintosh visioned the huge, primitive elephant lumbering down to a pond constructed by prehistoric beavers. Although it was "pure conjecture" he thought the weight of the heavy beast might have caused it to sink deeply in soft mud, that it died there. The position of the bones indicated the mastodon had perished standing.
Mastodon skeletons have been found in various parts of the United States, Western Canada and twice in Nova Scotia. Covered with thick coats of reddish hair, the great animals came northward thousands of years ago as the massive ice fringe of the Great Ice Age receded.
The pleistocene epoch began about 550,000 years ago, according to some geologists. During that period the mammoth became dominant with the decline of the gigantic reptiles—dinosaurs and pterodactyls. Extinction of the mastodon is regarded as a mystery, but many were believed trapped in steaming marshes left by the receding ice.
Charcoal and broken pottery under mastodon bones found at Altona, N.Y., have been cited as evidence that prehistoric humans of the continent either harried or were harried by the massive beasts. Farther south the ferocious sabre-toothed tiger padded after its prey.
The name "mammoth" has been applied generally to the type of elephant found almost perfectly preserved in the frozen soil of Siberia.

Prevent Trouble At Calving Time
The length of time the cow is dry has considerable to do with her ability to produce consistently during a lactation period. Everything else being equal, the cow with the longer rest period will produce more consistently and a greater quantity of milk.
During the rest period the cow stores fat, as well as mineral nutrients which are to be found in the milk she gives. If she has no opportunity to store up these things she is likely to fall off in milk yield very rapidly after a few months. The length of time that a cow should be dry will depend on her previous lactation and production expected.
A young cow that has milked very heavily and is not yet mature should have more rest than a mature cow from 10 to 12 weeks many helpers, if heavy production is expected of them. Mature cows that have not produced very heavily, can do well on six to eight weeks' rest; they should not have less than six weeks.
The last few days before calving are very important and probably more mistakes are made than at any other time. During this period, as well as for three or four days after calving, the cow should be fed very lightly, as her digestive system is not in a position to handle any large amount of feed.
Two or three days before calving, if necessary, give the cow a laxative of Epsom salts. After calving the chill should be removed from her drinking water for two or three days. She should have a warm bran mash and be blanketed if the weather is cold.

Investigation of Investment Trusts
WASHINGTON, July 27.—(AP)—Opening a congressional ordered investigation of investment trusts, after winning a preliminary court skirmish, the United States Securities Commission today ran into a suggestion that one large company had bought its own stock to "ball out" bankers.
A question from commission counsel suggesting the Interstate Equities Corporation of New York had bought its own stock from the Bancamerica-Blair Corporation "to ball the bankers out of their position" in it was hotly denied by a former president of the trust.
Edward R. Tinker, the former president, also quickly denied a balance sheet showing in the trust's assets from $25,000,000 in 1929 to $4,500,000 in 1932 represented a "loss".
The hearing started after the commission had won the initial round in a court battle involving its authority to proceed with the inquiry. In Federation District Court, Judge Oscar Lühring denied a plea by Frederick T. Fisher of New York to prevent the commission from obtaining records of the trust. Fisher is a stockholder. Judge Lühring announced, however, the world would hold a hearing on Fisher's action August 5.
Fisher issued a statement saying his action was designed to test the authority of the government to claim the time of business men.

MALE OLYMPIANS MUST BE ALONE
(By The Canadian Press) BERLIN, July 27.—German Olympic officials are still worrying about the "female problem." They haven't yet decided to yield to the Finns, who ask to have an elderly woman live in Olympic Village. The Finnish hot baths. The Village was planned to house 4,500 men—and no women.
Since there will be stage shows provided for athletes in the village, the authorities were really bothered by the thought of the actresses' presence. To remedy the situation, they provided for the female stage stars to enter the theatre by a back exit, kept locked except when in use. There will be no hanging about stage doors. The actresses will come and go in locked cars.
With the athletes "quarantined" against female charm like children against measles, Berliners are calling Olympic Village "Dorf der Maenner"—village of men.

REPORTED MENACE TO S' SIDE HARBOR

Criticism with regard to alleged methods employed in dredging operations at Summerside harbor is voiced by the Summerside Journal, which says editorially:

"When the Federal Government gave a contract to have dredging performed at Summerside at a cost of $27,000, it was generally felt that this was a good thing. Certainly the work is necessary if Summerside harbor is to be maintained as a port for the large amount of public money which is being called here in the last few years are to continue coming. It is inevitable, of course, as in other seaports where dredging is done, that in the course of years bottom areas which have been deepened will gradually fill in again and the process of dredging will have to be repeated. A proper job of dredging, however, should hold good for a considerable number of years. But there is one method in connection with the carrying out of such work which is wrong and makes it labor in vain, unsatisfactory and a waste of the large amount of public money involved in such a project. On what we believe to be excellent authority we are informed that a large quantity of the mud raised from the harbor in the present operations is being dumped rather too close to the breakwater and mud in the course of a comparatively short time gradually find its way back into the harbor. This is bad enough, but according to the information we have received, on several occasions the tug conveying the mud has not even taken it outside the harbor entrance, but has deposited it inside the breakwater. This latter procedure, it is said, is a repetition of a thing that was done some years ago with disastrous results to harbor accommodation, the silt of the bottom filling in the channel around the town wharf only about 10 or 12 feet at high tide, so that a steamer of any size is unable any longer to dock at the west side of this wharf. If this method has been followed in the present dredging, as alleged, it is time that it should be prevented. Dredging is a luxury that cannot be afforded very frequently and should not be required if the work is carried out properly in the first place."
