Russian Famine.

From private letters received in England during the last few days it would appear that the famine in Russia is by no means the thing of the past that recent reports have been inclined to represent it. In the districts of Tula and Riazan, where Count Tolstoi has been working, the large sums which he has received from all parts of the world have enabled him to cope with the distress in a really efficient manner, but in the remotest and less favored districts the relief has been entirely inadequate, and the condition of the peasantry is more precarious than ever. They are not only without food, but have disappeared of the horses and agricultural implements upon which next year's harvest depends. Typhus and scurvy are breaking out in all parts and spreading with alarming rapidity into districts unaffected by the famine itself. The spring thaw, which is just setting in, will make all roads impassable in the country districts for three or four weeks, and the immediate prospect is darker perhaps at present than it has been at any time during the winter. The various organizations which have been set on foot in this country to collect funds for the relief of the distressed are, therefore, earnestly appealing for further contributions. The Society of Friends, which has displayed more energy than any other body in the matter, has already collected some £50,000. The Russian Famine Fund Committee, of which Lord Monkswell is chairman, has up to the present received about £2,500. Latterly a considerable falling off has been caused in the contributions by the impression that the famine is over and further relief not required. As this impression is entirely erroneous the organizers of the relief funds are naturally anxious to have it removed. Opinions may differ as to whether it was the duty or not of the English people to contribute in the first instance to the relief of Russian distress, but, having once begun, we cannot very well leave the work half done.

Father McSweeney, of New York.

It is to the credit of the Roman Catholic clergy of New York that they, more than the ministers of any other denomination, have taken strong aggressive ground against the saloons and whiskey drinking places of the city, which are breeding disease and poverty, and shortening the lives of thousands of our citizens. The Rev. Father McSweeney, the outspoken pastor of St. Bridget's Chapel, New York, in a recent stirring discourse addressed to his people from the pulpit, said: "Look at the daily newspapers and read the number of stabbings, murders and other crimes that fill the police courts, and from what cause? All or very nearly all from whiskey drinking. In this parish are families who never go to bed sober, and amuse themselves by abusing their wives and children. They are not all taken home on a stretcher, but stagger in and find fault with their unfortunate wives for not having supper. "The cursed habit of rum-drinking is bringing destruction on our Irish people, and it would have been far better for some of them had they starved in the bogs of Ireland than to be spending their time and money in the grog shops of this city, and making themselves a laughing stock for everybody. "There are fathers and mothers in this parish who are not only drunkards themselves, but who are actually teaching their children to be drunkards also by giving them drink. It is said to think that not only the men and women, who were brought up Catholics, are slaves to drink, but many of our young men are confirm drunkards before they are able to earn five dollars a week. Other people do their drinking in a decent way, but our people must stand in the whiskey shops kept by their own race. Go along and watch the signs and you'll find Patrick and Michaela over the doors more than any other names, and only recently one man murdered another while drunk over a quarrel because they did not come from the same part of Ireland. "The doctor grew eloquent towards the close, and the rafters of the church seemed to tremble as he exclaimed: "There are 8,887 rum-holes in this city, most of whose owners can be seen any fine afternoon in Central Park riding in carriages bought with money paid for whiskey by the wretches who spend their time and money away from their homes and families."—Society Journal.

The Open Gates of Hell.

A letter to the N. Y. Voice from Oak Park, Ill., tells of a citizen of that place, a church member and a man of noble character, barring his threshold to whiskey, who left his home and family to start for a Prohibition State to get away from the temptation of the saloons. He had prayed over the matter and discussed it with his wife, and deliberately came to the conclusion that there was no other way of escape for him. He could not bear to bid his babies good-bye for fear it might weaken his resolution, nor did he dare to wait till morning and then take the train at Oak Park, as in that case he would have to pass by the open saloons. Accordingly he walked nine miles in the dark of night to take a train before the saloons should begin "business." He told his wife they were like the open gates of hell to him, and when he was near them it seemed as though the hosts of the devil were after him to get him in. "Nesth the sheltering pull of night, "Nesth the stars that shine like tears; See his father hurrying on, With his warring hopes and fears; Swiftly from his babies sleeping, Swiftly from his poor wife weeping, Speeds he on, oh, manly part! Tempted, weak, yet gallant heart! In God's name he travels well, Flying from the gates of hell. Through the city's silent streets, Past the haunts of sin and sorrow, Hear his echoing, haunted steps, Harkening to the glad to-morrow; Thinking of his babies sleeping, Praying for his good wife weeping; Past the churches tall and still, Past the mansions on the hill; Oh he flies, God speed him well, Flying from the gates of hell. In his tossing, troubled thought, Church and mansion melt in one, Shaping forth a blessed spot— "A home, a home, and that his own— Where in peace his babies are sleeping, Where for joy his wife is weeping, Where his noble heart may know, Safety from the demon foe, Where God's blessing rich may dwell, Far from open gates of hell. Christian man, with plying thought, Use that ballot in your hand; Here's the battle to be fought— Church of Christ, arise and stand! Shield the million babies sleeping, Succor all the poor wives weeping; Break the chains that bind our brothers, Dry the tears of pale-faced mother; Rise and crush this demon fell! Shut up all the gates of hell!"

Girls are Mad.

THEY MUST REMAIN IN THE HOUSE AFTER 8 P.M.—CITY COUNCIL OF SALEM, O., IN THE ROLE OF REGULATORS. CANTON, O., April 25.—Considerable excitement and no little talk has been created in the neighboring town of Salem by an action taken by the city council Tuesday evening. The ordinance reads as follows: Section 129, revised ordinances of the town of Salem, are hereby amended as follows: "No young woman under 21 years of age shall be permitted to be abroad upon the streets or highways of the town after 8 o'clock at night, unless accompanied by husband, parent or guardian." The penalty for violation of this act shall be a fine of not more than $10, or 60 days' imprisonment, or both. To go into effect on and after May 1, 1892.
