ELLEN'S DIARY

Recipe to Cure Boredom Should Help Every Case

"How are we — all?" we inquired of Alice, a son of the house across the lane on his first call of this morning.

"His expression was like that of the day, more or less bleached."

"Not good?" he replied indifferently.

"No?"

"It's this way" he said soberly, "last littles mother-cat and her kittens are gone from the pigery."

"What?" we exclaimed, "neither whip nor stick of the m left there?" He shook his head.

"No, not a sign. Only the little hollow among the feedbacks where they were. And that's cold. Something's taken them, I guess — And they were all gold and pretty" he sighed.

"Don't you suppose that something, was the littles cat herself?" we queried. "They've been having too many visitors to please her. So she has carried them, one by one, off to some quieter spot."

He brightened. "And they're not gone for always!"

"No, Dear?" James said, "Ebe's just moved them — perhaps up to a loft. We'll find them!" he promised.

However not up to this. A dejected "There's no trace of their whereabouts yet" is the report, we have more than once heard today from the children.

"I declare, Ellen, I'm getting tired of our weather — it's been boring, that's what it is!" a visitor of today, another farmwife offered.

We could do with more sunshine. There is too much music these times in listening to the patter of raindrops on the roof. Yet how fervently we on farms have prayed for it, before this, and gradually held faces skyward, sooner or later to feel them, the refreshing raindrops.

"When I meet women who seem to be bored with life," we recall reading somewhere "I itch and long to advise them to (a) get a new haircut; (b) buy something bright red, if only a new scarf or a new slip; (c) try a new recipe, or enough new ones for a whole meal; (d) get
