Yugoslav Refugees Crowding Into Austria

By RICHARD R. KASISCHKE VIENNA (AP)—Austria is still burdened with about 35,000 Hungarian refugees, but some government officials here express more concern about an influx from Yugoslavia. These officials believe that most of the remaining Hungarians will either be resettled in Western countries or absorbed here within a year or so. But they don't like the looks of the illegal immigration from Yugoslavia. It totalled more than 1,000 persons in April, with an increase indicated for May. During 1956 Austria took in some 2,500 Yugoslav refugees. This year the monthly totals climbed from 262 in January to 570 in February and 917 in March, with a real boom expected in the summer.

UNLIMITED QUOTAS

There seems no hope of any new large-scale admission, but the Hungarians here don't seem able or willing to understand this. There are now some 100,000 Hungarians in the country who are still advertising "unlimited" quotas, such as Canada, France, the United Kingdom and Israel. And chances for such countries as Australia and West Germany are also passing up.
