POETRY. AN AUTUMN RHYME. Oh golden sun-ray, paint with cunning finger The fleecy clouds that float in azure sky...

Whisper that breezes lengths quaint and olden Tales of the summer days that faded fast, While on the hill-sides, flower-plains bright and golden Bend to your kisses as ye murmur past.

Where on this earthly field lie life immortal, His children freed from care and woe and sin, To the bright land beyond the shining portal, Our Father's hand of love shall gather in.

"FOUND DEAD IN THE STREET." The labour is over and done; The sun has gone down in the west; The birds are sleeping every one, And the world has gone to its rest— Sleepers on beds of down, "Neath cover of silk and gold, Soft, as on roses new-blown, Sleep the great monarch of the world!

Dead—for the want of a crust; Dead—in the cold night-air; Dead—and under the dust, Without ever a word of prayer; The heart of the wealthiest city: In this most crowded of our streets, Without ever a word of pity, Or the touch of a kindly hand!

MISCELLANEOUS. TRUTH STRANGER THAN FICTION.

In the autumn of 1817, while the woods were bright with variegated hues which follow the light tints of autumn, a mounted traveller was quietly pursuing his way through a dark, broad, lovely forest, in the western part of the State of New York.

At that moment a man stepped out from a cluster of bushes into the road or horse-path, on the other side of the stream. This man was dressed like a hunter, and carried a rifle on his shoulder. In his general appearance there was nothing that indicated hostility or wicked design.

"THE IRISH IN AMERICA." BY JOHN F. MAGUIRE, ESQ., M. P. FOR CORK. [From the London Star.] Mr. Maguire began his tour at Halifax...

He went through Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick, Upper and Lower Canada, and most of the States of the Union, North and South. He saw and studied the condition of his countrymen as settlers in the forest even yet unbroken, as labourers on the wharves of Boston and the levees of New Orleans, as miners, as farmers, as artisans, as merchants, as capitalists.

He produced an elaborate and exhaustive study of his subject; let us add that in doing so he has made a very entertaining as well as instructive book. There is not an uninteresting chapter from beginning to end of this volume. Mr. Maguire has enlivened his subject by a copious variety of humorous anecdotes, illustrative of the drollery, the whimsicality, the vivacity which, under strange circumstances, seem to characterize the Irishman.

Mr. Maguire's report of the condition of his countrymen in America is, on the whole, highly favourable. The Irish emigrant whom he describes is very different indeed from the sort of being whom Times corresponds and Times leading articles delight to picture and to moralize over. Mr. Maguire finds the Irishman in America, a man of indomitable energy and patient labour; a man who has fought his way up from poverty to comfort and prosperity, and often even to opulence; who has lands and bees, and money in the bank.
