Specialist Navigation Course Is Completed

Thirty weeks of hard study and steady application to their work are now behind the eight members of No. 3 Specialist Navigation Course which concluded at the R. C. A. F. Station, Summerside last evening. Three courses in air navigation are given at the Summerside school and the specialist course is at the top of the ladder. It is in the nature of post graduate work. The officers who are graduated from it are qualified for any senior navigational staff position in the R. C. A. F. Commonwealth or Allied Air Forces. Included in the course are 500 hours of lectures and 170 hours of flying. Fifteen visiting service and civilian lecturers from other parts of Canada and the United States, all highly specialized people in their respective fields were brought to Summerside to lecture to members of the course. In addition many hours were spent under the tutorial system which could be used for private study or when a student could get private instruction. During the course flights were taken to Canadian, United States and United Kingdom points where research and operational establishments in the field of air navigation were visited to broaden the experience of the students. Also two weeks were recently spent in the Arctic, giving the navigators experience flying in that difficult country.

Leads Course
Squadron Leader W. L. Gillespie, officer commanding specialist courses, said yesterday that it has been a good course and worth the effort expended on it. The course members obtained high averages and F/L E. J. Haugen was the top student and the only student on either of the first courses held to get a distinguished pass.
