The Golden Girl

By AGNES LOUISE PROVOST AND LADBROKE BLACK
Continued

Gloria threw her hat on the oot which was a divan by day and a bed by night, and dropped into a chair with a sigh. It was a shabby chair in a shabby room where everything crowded everything else and the one window, looking out on a deep wall of masonry dotted with endless rows of other windows, failed at its best to do more than keep the room in a diluted twilight.

The room was no stranger to her. She had lived here for nearly a year before she had gone to Beechwood, sharing the tiny apartment with a fellow clerk. She and Sara Dalton had been quite excited about it when they had first moved in. Now she was shocked to find how dingy and airless it seemed, how cramped and ugly after the spacious dignity of Beechwood. It was marvelously lucky for her that Sara had stayed on after she had left, stretching her own resources until she could get someone else to come in with her.

Sara had been a darling. She received the returned prodigal with open arms. "That had been ten days ago, and still there was not the faintest ghost of a position in sight in spite of miles of walking and endless applications. Times were hard and jobs were few, and everywhere the same note repeated itself with a persistence that beat against her courage.

"Where were you last employed? What references have you?" She had references from her previous employers of course, the firm of public stenographers from whose office she had gone to Miss Endicott, but sooner or later the question of time seemed to edge its way in, that deadly hiatus of six months when she had been at Beechwood. Perhaps the trouble was that she couldn't tell glib little lies, but she never had been able to do that. And what else was there to say? "I have been a social secretary for the past six months, but for personal reasons I don't wish to ask for a recommendation." Could anything be sillier than that?

"You ought to get in on your looks," said the practical Sara, "only you freeze 'em up when they want to hold hands. Why don't you make up a good yarn about being away visiting your relations for the past six months? Only I suppose it would be just your luck to land some nosy brute who would want to write to your uncle about it—you poor lamb!"

Gloria had smiled over that and later had felt a little blue about it. Of course it was ridiculous and could never happen, but she could just imagine the sour satisfaction with which Uncle Robert would write back that he had not seen his niece for three years. She opened her purse now and counted her dwindling resources. They were slim, for in spite of Sara's objections she had insisted on paying at least for her share of the meals, and her funds were diminishing with appalling rapidity. Gloria put the money back in her purse and slumped glumly down in the old chair. If she scripped it would last another ten days. No more. And she was tired to death and flat with discouragement, and there was a run in her stockings.

The look clicked. She straightened up quickly as Sara came in. "Any luck, honey?" "Not a scrap. I'll get an early start tomorrow." Sara sat down on the creaking couch. She was older than Gloria, a tall woman, thin and angular, and looked ever minute of her thirty-five years. She made no comment on her friend's discouraging report. Rather slowly she removed her neat fabric gloves, then gave an abrupt shrug and slapped them down beside her. "Well, Gloria we're in the same boat, Narkham and Downes have discontinued their New York office and I'm out. I knew it Monday, but I hated to tell you."

"They looked at each other uneasily. Sara shrugged again, and one corner of her mouth quirked grimly. She seemed to be pondering something. "Look here, Gloria, do you mind if I apply for your job with the Endicott? I stopped at the agency today and after a lot of solemn palaver they gave me her name. Special client, very particular, and all that. Mind if I have a whirl at it?"

"Sara, you idiot! I'd be perfectly delighted. You'll get it, too. You'd be splendid at it." "Going to see her tonight," said Sara briefly. "She's at the Benham now. How about wearing that black crepe with the white collar and cuffs? I look like Methusalem's maiden aunt in it, so I ought to go over big. I'd better press it first—" "No, let me! You lie down and rest."

Gloria was up and burrowing in their one closet for the black dress. Sara called after her.

"Oh wait, here's a letter for you. I met the postman downstairs and he gave it to me. It's been following you all over."

"Throw it in on the table," said a muffled voice from the closet. Gloria had no time to read letters now.

H. C. ATKINSON
GROCERIA

111-115 Grafton St.

with interest the affairs of his home and business, and to extend his usual warm greetings to his friends and neighbours until the day previous to his death.

Born in 1875, only son of the late Angus Cameron and Emma Beer Cameron, the deceased was a life long resident of Head of Hillsborough, with the exception of a few years spent mainly in the United States where he was engaged in carpenter work, an occupation which he carried on at his home until about a year previous to his passing.

He was a man who always took keen interest in community affairs and the large number of people who came from near and far showed sympathy for the bereaved and bore tribute to the respect of the deceased.

He is survived by his wife, the former Euphemia Douglas; three sons, Merrill, Billerica, Mass., Louis and Ernest, Head of Hillsborough, Edith, Mrs. Lorne MacMillan, West Covehead; Etta, Cambridge, Mass., and Beatrice on the Teaching Staff of Spring Park School; also seven grandchildren. The funeral was held from his late residence on May 4th, and was conducted by the Rev. Donald Nicholson of Brookfield, assisted by the Rev. Mr. Mercer of Mt. Stewart and Rev. T. A. Wilson of Covehead.

The hymns sung were "Unto the Hills" and "Nearer My God to Thee". A solo "God Understands" was nicely rendered by Mr. Harold Coffin.

The pall bearers were Arthur MacLauchlan, John McEachern, Ralph Coffin, Geddie Douglas, Ernest Bambrick and Harvey Douglas. Interment was in the West St. Peter's Cemetery.

The floral tributes were very beautiful and were as follows: Willow — the Family. Spray — the Grandchildren. Double Spray — Mary and Margaret Douglas, Boston, Mass. Crescent — Mrs. W. Henry Coffin and Family. Wreath — Louise and Everett, Clifford and Ethel, South Boston, Mass. Spray — Frank, Bessie, Ernest, Ray and Eleanor.

Spray — Fulton, Ethel and Miriam. Spray — Harvey, Edith, Leslie and Lane. Spray — Howard and Viola. Spray — Rita and Lou. Spray — Will and Etta Freeman, Mattapan, Mass. Spray — Arthur, Marion and Ruth. Spray — Mrs. Hettie McAssey and Family. Spray — Mrs. Wayne, Miriam, Kent, Blanche and Harvey. Spray — Ethel Youland. Spray — Billerica Grange, Billerica, Mass. Spray — Teacher and Pupils of Head of Hillsborough School. Wreath — The Clark Family. Wreath — Teaching Staff Spring Park School.

IN MEMORIAM

In loving memory of MRS. ALEX M. ACORN who died June 8th, 1948.

'Cream' Coffee this way for Richer Flavor!

Fill your cream pitcher with Carnation Evaporated Milk. Taste why millions prefer Carnation to cream in coffee. Carnation has cream's thick consistency and color — gives coffee a rich, smooth flavor. But Carnation costs only half as much as light cream.

Use the Milk that's Rich Enough to Whip!

Yes — Carnation Evaporated Milk is heavy enough to whip. That's why you can use it almost anytime you would use cream ... why you can dilute it for regular milk uses.

CARNATION IS good, whole milk evaporated to half-volume. Only water is removed — nothing but vitamin D is added. All the milk food values are there. And Carnation is homogenized and heat-refined for extra smoothness and richer flavor.
