Business Is Good For U.S. Authors

HOLLYWOOD (AP) - How does it feel with the United States bestselling authors. With notable exceptions, most authors are hard at work at their craft. So it appears from an Associated Press survey of noted novelists. They were asked: "What are you writing, and how is it going?"

Nobel laureate John Steinbeck replied from New York. "I am charmed with the simplicity of your questions and am pleased to answer them with equal directness. To the first part of the question he wrote 'nothing.' To the second: 'nothing.'"

From Paris, Mary McCarty (The Group) answered even more succinctly: "Nothing."

Others appeared more industrious, if guarded: Herman Wouk, Virginia Islands - "I am writing a new novel which I hope to complete and possibly to publish in 1964."

John O'Hara, Princeton, N.J. - "I am continuing work on a long novel, and writing short stories."

Erskine Caldwell, Rhein Vaux, Calif. - "Am finishing a book about the means and extremes of contemporary life in the United States. This is based on personal impressions of people and things after 25,000 miles of travel from side to end and from side to side of the country. Title: Around About America."

How is it going? "To me it's looking good on paper." John Updike, Ipswich, Mass.

FRONTIER STYLE DRINKING BLAMED

REGINA (CP) - The "frontier style" of drinking common in North America could be responsible for creating many alcoholics, says J. F. A. Calder, former director of the Saskatchewan bureau on alcoholism.

Mr. Calder has been named director of the Saskatchewan Bureau on Alcoholism in New York, after 10 years with the Saskatchewan Bureau.

In North American society, in contrast to Europe, people often drink with the sole purpose of becoming intoxicated, he said.

"We somehow have the idea that drinking alcohol is a must to get drunk to prove he is a man. It is probably a carry-over from the frontier-type of drinking where the common belief was that the better the drinker, the better the man."

To The Electors of WARD THREE

During the past few years, several organizations, notably the federation of agriculture, the tourist association, the fisheries federation, and the home and school association, have been presenting briefs.

At last year's session, a number of House members questioned the wisdom of the Legislature hearing briefs which were being presented by the government. Members of some organizations last year went so far as to say they felt "unwelcome" in the Legislature.

Premier Shaw said that so far this year he has not been advised that organizations will present briefs. He said, however, "if they want to present briefs, we'll be happy to receive them."

"Good! I'll send you my cheque today!"

Most people today pay for goods or services by cheque - because most people have a bank account. It's the simple, safe way to transfer money to any person at any time.

The next cheque you put in the mail, or cash at any branch of a chartered bank, will be one of one billion that pass through the banking system each year. These familiar slips of paper represent 90 per cent of all financial payments made today, and their fast, efficient handling by the chartered banks is essential to bank customers, indeed to the whole economy of the nation.

To handle the ever-increasing flow of cheques - and to maintain standards of efficiency in the clearings - the chartered banks have introduced magnetic ink encoding to be used in high-speed electronic sorting. This new method, called MICR, makes possible a faster, more accurate service to customers, and maintains your chequeing account as one of the cheapest, most convenient basic banking services.
