Air Marshal Slemon Expected To Retire

By DAVE McINTOSH

OTTAWA (CP) — RCAF Air Marshal Roy Slemon, occupant of one of the hottest of the hot seats in the cold war for nearly six years, is expected to retire this summer as deputy chief of North American Air Defence Command.

His likely successor will be American-born Air Vice-Marshal Max Hendrick, 53, a telecommunications expert who has been dealing with senior U.S. military officers for at least five years. He now is chief of the RCAF's Air Defence Command.

Slemon, 58, has been deputy chief of the Canada-U.S. command since NORAD was established in 1957 to detect give warning of and fight off any Soviet air assault on this continent.

He has broken in the two successors to Gen. Earle Partridge, the first American commander of NORAD—Gen. Laurence Kuter and Gen. John Gerhart, the current commander.

NERVES UNFRAYED

His nerves have not been frayed, apparently by the many crises NORAD has passed through — crises which have left other NORAD headquarters personnel pale and shaken.

For example, on Oct. 3, 1960, data from the ballistic missile early warning radar at Thule, Greenland, made it appear a flock of missiles had been launched toward North America.

From his long experience, Slemon felt that the warning did not ring true. He refused to flash an alert while others around him were clamoring for a warning to be sent to the headquarters of the U.S. Strategic Air Command, the Canadian and U.S. governments, the air defence squadrons.

CHECKED THULE

Calmly and quickly, Slemon checked Thule, found that the radar signals were reflections from the moon of Thule's own radar transmissions.

A native of Winnipeg, Slemon was chief of staff commander of the RCAF's No. 1 bomber group in the United Kingdom during the Second World War. He was chief of air staff for nearly five years before going to NORAD in the fall of 1957.

Hendrick was born at Portland, Ore., and joined the RCAF in 1934. He was Canadian air attache at Washington in 1950-51, chief of RCAF telecommunications chief of RCAF technical services and from 1958 to 1962 chairman of the Canadian Joint staff at Washington.

He is considered a natural to succeed Slemon in the $20,000-a-year post because of his experience in telecommunications and air defence and in Washington.

QUIZ

You are South, both sides vulnerable. The bidding has been:

| East | South | West | North |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1♥ | Pass | 2♥ | Pass |
| Pass | ? | | |

What would you now bid with each of the following four hands?

1. ♠K85 ♥8542 ♦AJ4 ♣KQ6
2. ♠J9853 ♥853 ♦Q10 ♣AK9
3. ♠AQ83 ♥6 ♦K742 ♣J954
4. ♠AK6 ♥KQ65 ♦Q7543 ♣5

1. Double. Logical deductions about the nature of partner's hand can sometimes be drawn by simply listening to the opponents' bidding. For example, in this hand where East- West stop at two hearts, South has a right to assume that his partner has very few hearts (probably a singleton) and also has some high-card values (otherwise, the opponents would have kept on bidding).

The part score should therefore be contested, and the best way of doing so is with a takeout double. The odds favor partner having a five- card suit or better. In any case, it would be unwise to give up the hand without competing at this point.

2. Two spades. It is less dangerous to bid spades now, even with such a poor suit, than it would have been to overcall directly with a spade after the opening heart bid. The reason is that the opponents' willingness to play at a part score indicates that partner has from 6 to 10 high-card points, and that he probably has at least moderate support for spades, since he is marked to be short in hearts. This knowledge was unavailable at the point when East opened the bidding with a heart.

3. Double. Here, also, as in the first hand, the best thing to do is double. It is true that a take out double usually shows more than 10 high-card points, but the normal requirements may be shaded when a player is in the balancing seat, that is, when the bidding would be over if he passed.

It would be wrong to bid two spades in the hope of finding partner with spade support, when there is available a bid to force partner to name his best suit and thus find the best trump fit.

4. Pass. This hand has greater potential value on defense than offense. There is a good chance that East will be defeated at two hearts, and it is more prudent to pass in the hope of achieving a plus score this way than it would be to bid and run the risk of winding up with a minus score.

The alternative bids to a pass are uninviting. A double would probably elicit a three club response from partner, while a direct bid of three diamonds with such a weak suit could lead to serious complications.

Mercury Program Reported Closed

WASHINGTON (AP) — The National Aeronautics and Space Administration has closed its Mercury manned-satellite program to concentrate on Project Gemini, the next step toward a manned moon landing.

NASA administrator James E. Webb announced here that, with the "best brains" of Project Mercury made fully available for the more advanced program, this Gemini launching schedule is planned:

1. Next December January, a sub-orbital mission using a "boilerplate" or dummy model of the two-man craft. This would be a short, unmanned flight of a full-size, weight Gemini craft, without its internal equipment, to test the capsule's aerodynamic performance.

2. Three months later, a partial system test or possibly a full orbital-flight test of the complete Gemini vehicle and its Titan II launching booster.

3. Late in the Summer or in early Fall of next year, a full unmanned orbital flight or—if the previous tests go well—the first orbital mission with a two-man crew.

In later Gemini flights, lasting up to two weeks, crew members will leave their craft to try moving about individually—with the safeguard of a tethering line—in space.

SHIP VISITS

CHICAGO (AP)—The French warship Bouvet steamed into Lake Michigan Thursday on its way to Montreal after a five-day goodwill visit here. The ship's commander, Rene Quentin, said more than 20,000 persons visited the vessel while it was tied up at a pier in the Chicago River. The Bouvet, a destroyer, is manned by a crew of 300.
