

This Life is What We Make It.

Let's often talk of noble deeds, And rarar of the bad ones, And sing about our happy days, And not about the sad ones. We were not made to fret and sigh, And when grief sleeps to wake it, Bright happiness is standing by— This life is what we make it.

Crops in Canada.

Crop reports from all parts of the Dominion continue good. A gentleman, recently returned from the South-Western United States, and who has passed through the Western and Northern States, in conversation with a Montreal capitalist yesterday, remarked that the appearance of the crops in the province of Ontario was better than anything he had seen in all his travels. "That may be so," said the capitalist; "you did not see the equal of the Province of Ontario in your travels. It is not to be found in the United States. For good land, good farming and an intelligent population, comfortably housed and clothed, Ontario is unequalled in America."

Total Abstinence and Longevity.

Time was, and that not so long gone by, when it was thought that total abstinence was rather injurious to health, and had a certain tendency to shorten the lives of those who practiced it. So much was this the case that life insurance companies sometimes charged these poor total abstainers an extra premium for the alleged additional risk. This delusion has now been thoroughly exploded. It is found, as was to be expected, that on an average total abstainers are healthier and longer-lived than even moderate drinkers, to say nothing of those who deal in "potations pottle deep. Instead now of temptations being charged an extra premium they are found entitled to an extra discount, and some insurance companies are so convinced of this by the yearly bills of mortality and the yearly accumulation of statistics on the point that they have a special section and a special special rate for total abstainers, so as to give them the full benefit arising from their greater healthfulness and longevity. This is as it ought to be. Any other arrangement handicaps the sober, healthy, total abstainer, and taxes him for the benefit of his tippling brother. Such an arrangement is not fair, and all total abstainers ought to insist upon getting in the matter of life insurance, as in every other, the full benefit arising from their healthier and more natural habits.—Toronto Globe.

His Wife Was Wise.

He had been very kind and solicitous for several days, and at breakfast yesterday morning he suddenly remarked: "My dear, don't you know how bad it makes me feel to see you look so thin and careworn?" "Yes," she softly replied. "You must have lost at least five pounds in the last month." "I presume so." "And that haggard expression shows everwork and need of rest?" "Yes." "Dear me! but I should never forgive myself if I should go into decline." "See here, Henry," she replied, as she laid down her fork and looked him square in the eye. "You want to drop that. If you think you can pack me off to the country for a month and leave you to gallop around here you have got hold of the wrong end of the string." He sighed heavily, but made no reply, and yet, as he stood on the corner waiting for the car, and Smith asked him how his wife was, he answered: "Picking right up, thank you. She's gaining a pound a week right along, and was never in better spirits."
