Death of the English Aristocracy.

No class of men seem more favorably situated for longevity than the British aristocracy, but time is constantly extinguishing their families. Of the Barons who met in the first Parliament over six hundred years ago, the descendants of two only now sit in the House of Peers. More than a hundred of the original great families of England have thus become extinct. There are now but four surviving peerages which were creations of the fourteenth century, but seven surviving peerages of the fifteenth, twelve of the sixteenth, thirty-five of the seventeenth, and of the eighteenth century ninety-five. All the remainder are creations of the present century

The Prince of Wales.

The Prince of Wales is a man both of tact and of taste. Paris society was much exercised in its mind as to the etiquette which would decide the choice of his partner in the cotillion at Lady Lyons's ball—whether the lady of the highest rank (of course it could be no other) would be selected from English or French claimants to that dignity. His Royal Highness, however, settled the question by leading out an American young lady, Miss Natica Rznaga, the sister of Lady Mandeville. Such are the advantages of a good education early in life. The Prince of Wales learned to dance with American young ladies when he was a mere lad of nineteen at the great New York ball in the Academy of Music, and he has never lost a chance of keeping himself in practice since.—U. S. paper.

Our Washington Letter.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 18, 1878.

The Senate has agreed to the "handoff" section of the Army Appropriation Bill, so if mobs and strikes and riots do rise, and rage, it can't be helped—troops may not speak till they are spoken to, or, in other words, they may not be sent till they are sent for. A leading New York Journal says, in regard to the matter, "The Congress of the United States has finally given in its adhesion to the view of the Constitution enunciated nearly 20 years ago, by President Buchanan. Citizens of the United States have no right to resist the enforcement of the laws; but, then, if they do what they have no right to do, the Government of the United States has no power to coerce them. What Buchanan declared in 1860, Congress endorses and acts upon in 1878."

Washington's mortuary list of last week contains an unusual number of notable names. The Peruvian Minister's death was a great surprise to every one, as it was scarcely known he was sick. He had been confined to his bed but a week. Col.
Fregre's family is a large one, and its members are very much attached to each other.
It is feared his father's death will result fatally to the eldest daughter, who is quite ill. His funeral services took place in St.
Matthew's Catholic Church. The catafalque was draped with the Peruvian flag, covered with flowers and surrounded with burning tapers. The Ministers from the Argentine Confederation, Paraguay and Brazil acted as pall-bearers. Another death in which the country is interested is that of Chief Clerk of the United States Senate, Major McDonald. He has held that office for forty-one years, having succeeded his father in it. The bereavement in his family is a double one, as his wife was so shocked when told that her husband was on his death bed and could not rally that she died within an hour, and was three days dead before her husband. Gen. Pelanze's funeral was conducted without pomp or show, but was attended by large representations from the army and navy.

One of the grandest sort of entertainments took place at the Navy Yard last week. The United States Steamship Nipsic was launched. She has been on the stocks, in process of construction, for nearly five years, and was the first vessel of the kind that has been launched from this yard for 25 years. From 20,000 to 30,000 persons were present—steamers, tugs and sailboats in the river being thronged with spectators, among whom were the President's family, several Cabinet members, Congressmen and other officials. The launch was a magnificent one, successful in every particular; and at the moment described in the couplet—

"She starts, she moves, she seems to feel The thrill of life along her keel" the enthusiasm was of the intensest sort.

The great ship slid into the element which was to be her home with a joyous bound, ploughing deep into the water and speeding straight across the river, never heeding the light anchor dropped at once to stop her, and coming to terms only when she hit a mud bank, into which she furrowed half her length, and defied all tug power to tow her off, but waited for the tide to lift her. The Nip sic will be barque-rigged, and of 1,375 tons displacement.

A very strange rumor is abroad concerning certain statements made by Gen.
Grant's brother relative to the ex-President's absence from this country and his prospects for re-election to the Presidency in 1880. He says that the proposition to place the General on the retired list instead of being done to honor and compliment the hero is a trick of politicians to "shelve" him so that he cannot again become a Presidential candidate. The loquacious brother further states that Gen. Grant left Washington a poor man, and that foreseeing the present state of political and administrative confusion and turmoil he left the country with the purpose of returning "just in the nick of time" to be made a hero, leader and President. I give the substance of the rumor for what it is worth.

parture from Paris, on Friday, for Holland, Here is an item for the superstitious. A large and costly steel portrait of the poet Bryant hung in an office in Pittsfield, Mass.

On the afternoon when he met with his accident the cord which held the portrait broke and it fell to the floor, shattering the frame and breaking the glass, but only slightly injuring the picture.
