Donor Clinics Are Scheduled

Striving for a goal of at least 1,200 blood donors are enthusiastic committees in the four centres in which Red Cross blood donor clinics will be held in Prince County during the week of November 21st. In three of these four centres Royal Canadian Branches are the sponsoring organization and the clinics will be held in their homes at Borden where Jack MacIsaac is the chairman, at Kensington where Earle Carrier heads the committee, and at Ellerslie with Wendell C. MacKay at the helm.

The fourth committee for the Summerside area is made up of representatives of the various service clubs among whom the chairmanship has been set up on a rotating basis. Byron MacDonald and Gordon Phillips, representing the Junior Chamber of Commerce of Summerside, are the co-chairman for this fall's effort and have an objective of 840 donors to achieve. The spacious auditorium at the George R. Peart-er Branch, Royal Canadian Legion, Summerside, has again been made available by the Summerside Legion for these Red Cross clinics at the western capital on Tuesday and Wednesday, November 22nd and 23rd.

The fifth committee is composed of ROCAF personnel at the Canadian Forces Base in Summerside with F.O. B.A. Roberts as the co-ordinator. This clinic takes place at the Recreation Centre at the station on Thursday, November 24th, from 9-12 in the morning, and from 1:30-2:30 in the afternoon with a quota of 240 donors.

According to reports received by the provincial chairman of the Red Cross blood donor committee, F.A.S. Jones, all committees are exploring every avenue in order to achieve a 100 per cent attendance at every clinic.

Mr. Jones stated that at the present time, as the result of the first four series of clinics, the province has an enviable record of having chalked up 105.4 per cent average in attendance even though the June and August clinics fell below their quotas. The maintaining of this 100 per cent plus record for the year 1966 is now up to the residents in the Prince County areas in which clinics are to be held during the week of November 21st, and Mr. Jones said he is confident everything possible will be done to "hold the line" and keep the province's blood supply at this high level.

BUSY PROGRAM

ways the one men must perform to return safely from a trip to the moon. Under the U.S. moon-travel plans, two astronauts will be boosted off the moon's surface in a small space cab to a rendezvous and link-up with an orbiting mother-ship for the return trip.

The flight suffered two frustrating delays this week — a hitch.

"All data looks good on the Gemini 12 mission," mission control reported as the giant Titan II rocket arched the spacecraft into hot pursuit of the Agena.

"You're steering right down the pike!" the astronauts were told just a few minutes into the air.

SET RECORD
Lovell set the space endurance record the minute he got up there because he shared the old marks of 330 hours, 35 minutes with his flying partner on Gemini 7—his only other space mission.

The spectacular double-header launch went off without a hitch, a switch from the frustrating delays caused by equipment problems on the Titan II rocket.

Minor problems cropped up at two stations in the worldwide tracking network, neither of which was expected to affect the mission. The Bermuda station reported radar problems and the Canton outpost in the central Pacific had a faulty high-frequency transmitter.

This was a nostalgic day for the Gemini launch teams who worked at pad 19, starting point for some of man's boldest adventures. Pad 19 now will be closed.

When Lovell and Aldrin walked to the base of the rocket to mount an elevator for the slow ride to the 100-foot level, the pad crew handed each a piece of cardboard shaped like a theatre ticket. Signed by hundreds of technicians, they read: Admit one.

And, once at the door of their space-ship, they were greeted with another sign: Notice. Last chance. No re-uns. Show will close after this performance.

The astronauts had a joke of their own. Lovell wore a sign on his back that said in red letters: The and Aldrin had one that read End.

The 7,000-pound Agena target was drilled into orbit on the tip of an Atlas rocket.

FLEW ON COURSE
Amid a stream of fire and a thunderous roar, the Atlas rose gracefully, true on course and precisely on time, at 2:08 p.m. Lovell and Aldrin could not see it, even though they were only 6,000 feet away, but heard radio reports of the Agena's flight. The astronauts' hatches had been shut about 15 minutes earlier. Strapped in their cramped seats, they could not lean up to Gemini 12's two small windows to spot the rocket.

A long night's work ahead. U.S. Navy Capt. Lovell, 38, and air force Maj. Aldrin, 36, slept until 10:30 a.m. Friday after going to bed about 1 a.m. then ate a hearty breakfast before slipping into their space-ship.

Tucked away in a special spot inside Gemini 12's crowded cockpit was a picture of pretty 14-year-old Barbara George of Houston, Tex., a friend of the Lovell family.

Barbara suffers from a incurable disease called ulcerative colitis, a disease she has battled half her life. Lovell promised to take the picture into space and return it to her as a souvenir of the lofty adventure.

LAST MISSION
Gemini 12, the final two-man mission before the start of three-man project Apollo flights early next year, had two primary objectives: Rendezvous, link-up and an extensive investigation of the problems that have plagued American space-walkers.

Aldrin plans three separate excursions from Gemini 12 as it sails through a weightless void. He will probe the question: Why do seemingly simple tasks become difficult, and how can this be overcome?

"In the lunar landing," Aldrin said in an interview, "we cannot succeed at all unless we actually conduct EVA (extra vehicular activity, or space-walking), which is walking on the surface of the moon."

During a two-hour stroll the third day, Aldrin plans to explore the problems in detail, resting frequently to conserve energy.

PURPLE SCIENTISTS
U.S. space officials have admitted being puzzled by the fact that things such as twisting a knob or buckling a strap became monumental tasks in space. Aldrin will do equally simple chores at two "work benches"—one on the rear of Gemini 12 and another on the Agena.

The flight plan, which includes 14 experiments:

First night: Rendezvous and link-up with the Agena, then fire the main Agena engine for a shove to an altitude of 400 miles from which Aldrin hopes to snap revealing pictures of the United States.

Saturday: Aldrin opens the hatch for a two-hour, 20-minute picture-taking session. At 460 miles high, he should be able to see the entire United States with one sweeping glance.

Sunday: Speeding over the Pacific, Aldrin into the arena of space, he first ties Gemini 12 to the Agena with a 100-foot cord and then goes about his investigation of man's ability to work outside. Later, Gemini 12 will be backed away 100 feet while tied to the Agena for a formation-flight experiment.

Monday: The third hatch-opening takes place with Aldrin again standing in the seat for more photographs of earth and the horizon. Originally, he had intended to get man's first pictures Saturday of a total solar eclipse from space, but the attempt was cancelled after the first one-day delay.

Tuesday: Snap pictures of a sodium vapor cloud sprayed across the sky by a French rocket launched in Algeria. Splashdown in the Atlantic Ocean southeast of Cape Kennedy.

Gemini 12 rings down the curtain on a highly successful program designed as the forerunner of an even more bold undertaking — an attempt to land men on the moon by 1970.

All told, 18 astronauts before Lovell and Aldrin got experience in orbit within 20 months. The Russians, who have been mulling their man-in-space plans, have not launched a man into space since Gemini began.

Variety, Special Interest Planned For Art Gallery

"The month of November is shaping up as one of variety and special interest in the activities of Confederation Centre Art Gallery. During the month, four widely differing exhibitions will be hung, and the gallery is anticipating the first visit of Dr. Joan Sutherland Boggs, Director of the National Gallery in Ottawa, who will deliver a special lecture in Charlottetown.

The exhibition calculated to draw most attention is a selection of the war paintings of Alex Colville which opened Thursday night in honor of the Remembrance Day period. Special efforts are being made to interest Legion members and other services of paintings depicting scenes of World War II.

UNUSUAL
In commenting on his career as a war artist, Colville has said, "being a war artist was an unusual experience because what one was apprehending was literally life and death. In this situation formal considerations became secondary, and idea of art's sake was absent. One tried to produce work, which however imperfect and unsatisfactory, would be a kind of homage to a terrible and moving aspect of human condition".

The remaining paintings have produced a graphic record of the impact of war on men and machines. Included are scenes of the everyday workaday life of men at war, and others which portray the destruction of the battlefield.

The exhibition has been arranged for Confederation Centre through the National Gallery.

Hanging concurrently with the Colville exhibition is the first major collection of the work of West Coast artist Maxwell Bates. The show is opening a Maritime tour of the Centre financed by a grant from the Canada Council.

Bates has been recognized as one of Western Canada's most distinguished and original artists, whose wide range of interest places him in the front rank of the contemporary scene.

One of the most advanced of Canadian abstractionist artists will also be accorded a Confederation Centre Gallery showing during the month. He is Damon deKormyomax, another British Columbian, who directs the Loft House Gallery in Ottawa. The artist has had many one-man shows in Canada and the United States and has won several major art awards.

Rounding out the month of exhibitions is a selection of twenty-eight photographs by Walker Evans from the Museum of Modern Art in New York.

The majority of the photographs depict scenes from the depression years, a result of Evans' assignment to portray rural America for a United States Government agency. The exhibition is being circulated throughout Canada by the National Gallery. It opens at Confederation Centre on November 16.

A highlight of the month will be a two day visit by National Gallery Director, Joan Sutherland Boggs. Widely known as an art critic, teacher and writer, Dr. Boggs was responsible for an extremely popular series on "understanding art" broadcast on the CBC network radio program Trans Canada Matinee.

While in Charlottetown she will deliver an illustrated lecture on Canada's National Gallery on November 17.

Housing Discussed

Thursday evening a number of citizens from both Summerside and Charlottetown met with members of the Senior Citizens' Housing Corporation in the Executive Council Chambers and discussed problems of public housing in both Summerside and Charlottetown.

Included in the delegations meeting with the Directors of the Corporation were Mayor George Key of Summerside along with several of the Summerside Town Councillors and representatives of the clergy from Summerside. Mayor Walker Cox and City Controller John Butler of Charlottetown, were also present at the meeting. Members of Government present included Premier Alex Campbell, Honourable Dr. Lorne Bannell, Honourable Keir Clark, Honourable T.E. Hickey and Honourable Gordon Bennett, Chairman of the Corporation.

The whole field of subsidized housing was discussed in detail by Mr. Osborne, a senior official of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation from Halifax. Mr. Osborne described the various programs through which municipalities, provinces and the Federal Government co-operate in providing low rental housing units.

The days activities concluded with a well attended banquet in the legion home catered to by the Legion Auxiliary.

In Tignish the joint parade was headed by Burkes Pipe Band followed by Tignish and Alberton Color Parties, Legionnaires, War Veterans, Air Cadets, Ladies Auxiliary of the Legion, Girl Guides, Cubs and Brownies under command of parade marshal J. Earle MacDonald. The Church of St. Simon and St. Jude was filled to capacity for the service at nine o'clock conducted by Very Rev. M. J. Rooney. Alberton, Tignish Honor War Dead Remembrance Day parades in Alberton and Tignish were the largest for many years in spite of an almost steady drizzle of rain. As in past years the combined parade was first held in Tignish at nine o'clock and in Alberton at eleven o'clock, both headed by Burkes Pipe Band.

At Alberton the parade formed up at the WI Hall and marched via Main St. past the Western Hospital to the War Monument.

Parade Marshal was Herbert Leavitt. Followed by Burkes Pipe Band, Tignish and Alberton Legion Color Parties, RCMP, Legionnaires, War Veterans, Ladies Auxiliary of the Legion, Tignish Air Cadets, Boy Scouts, Cubs and Guides.

The Memorial Service in Alberton was conducted by Hon. Capt. W. J. Phillips. In his opening remarks Captain Phillips said of his fallen comrades, "I have a shrine, I have a memorial to them in my heart." At the conclusion of the service he called upon the living to drop their apathy and discrimination and to "pull together." "Is the life we are now living," he asked, "worthy of the sacrifice of one of these boys?" The singing of "O Canada," "God Our Help In Ages Past" and the National Anthem was led by a massed choir.

Rev. Gerald Steele led in prayer. Two minutes of silent tribute were observed and the last post was sounded by Pipes Major Burke.

The names of those who paid the supreme sacrifice in two World Wars were read by Rev. J. W. Turple and Rev. M. R. Pocklington. Rev. E. E. Linton read the names of those who were placing wreaths. Mrs. John Skerry, of Alberton South, representing the motherhood of Canada, had the honor of laying the first wreath. Others were placed by representatives of the Federal and Provincial Governments, Alberton Branch of the Royal Canadian Legion and the Legion Auxiliary, local organizations, schools, relatives, places of business and others.

At the marsh past, the salute was taken by Hon. Robert E. Campbell, Mayor Roy Leard and Alberton-Legion President George Dunbar.
