ADVERTISING RATES

For small advertisements which are ordered for only one or two weeks the charge is 50 cents per inch for the first insertion, and 20 cents for each continuation. Rate cards are furnished on application at the office. Special contract prices at a reduced rate are quoted for advertisements four inches in size or larger, which are to run for three months or longer.

No special notices inserted unless paid for at the rate of 10 cents per line, and under no circumstances will such paid notices appear in the local column.

Special discounts made on all advertisements connected with Church Fairs, Bazaars, Picnics, etc. No notices will be inserted with the same unless the regular rate of 10 cents per line is paid.

That THE EXAMINER is considered by our Merchants and Manufacturers to be the leading newspaper in P. E. Island, and consequently the most valuable advertising medium through which to make their announcements public, is abundantly proved by the fact that in order to accommodate our advertisers we have been compelled to enlarge the paper to its present size.

THE DAILY EXAMINER is for sale by the following agents :—

R. H. Mason, Post Office, Charlottetown
J. McIntyre, Malpeque Road, "
C. Paul, Lower Spring Park Road, "

MANY MOURNERS.

Description of a Funeral in Far Distant Egypt.

From along the banks of the Mahmoudiyeh canal one day I saw a sad but interesting sight, says a foreign traveler. Away in the distance, on the opposite side, a large number of people were coming along, and upon their nearer approach I saw that they formed a funeral procession. Two sheikhs, with long blue tunics and white turbans, led the way; and immediately behind them were the men, to the number of twenty-six, chanting in a dismal way: "La Illah ila Allah, wa Mohammed ruscol Allah!" (There is no God but God, and Mohammed is the apostle of God.)

The funeral costumes were their every-day dresses, showing wide contrasts of color, some being blue, others black, yellow, white and brown. Then followed the bier, a young Moslem lad being carried to his long home. It was covered with large native rugs and was supported by four men, relieved in turn by others. The women and children came next, about sixty in all, the women weeping and wailing and waving handkerchiefs in front of them, now and again filling the still air with fearful shrieks. The women were dressed in the usual sombre blue covers and their faces were closely veiled. They halted opposite to the spot where I stood, and the men got on board of one of the tiny ferries that play backward and forward over the canal, taking the bier with them, and were rowed safely to the other side, the women meanwhile waiting and wailing for the dead youth.

The boat, which was about twenty feet long and eight feet in beam, having returned, the women and children then got on board, most of them sitting, and they were pushed across and landed. The procession then reformed and the wailing continued. The procession wended its way for a considerable distance along the banks of the canal under a grove of sycamore trees. The sight left a painful impression upon my mind. The day was beautiful, the birds piping out their joys overhead. Everything seemed happy except these poor Arabs, without a hope to cheer the dark tomb.

HE CAME BACK.

Jules Carle Refused to Be Buried Alive—He Rose Again.

Jules Carle of Juneau is 78 years old, but vigorous and well preserved. Twenty-six years ago he was living in New Westminster, B.C. One morning, as he sat in a restaurant awaiting his ordered breakfast, he suddenly died—at least there was every physical evidence of death—a victim of heart disease. He was laid out for burial and his friends kept the usual vigil over his body.

All the time he was keenly conscious of what went on about him and could realize his fate in store for him and yet was as helpless as if he had been really dead. In the afternoon of the next day his friends bore him in sadness to the graveyard. He suffered untold agonies lying in the coffin, with the lid fastened down. He tried in vain to move or make a noise to indicate that he was alive. The trance held him a deathlike prisoner. Finally he could feel himself being lowered into the grave. As the first clod of earth struck the lid of the coffin he began feeling warm blood pulsing from his heart. All at once he could move his hands. He struck the coffin lid and called out for help. The alarmed pallbearers stopped shoveling dirt into the grave. He called again. The majority of those present beat a hasty retreat, alarmed over the fact that the dead had come to life.

One courageous friend unscrewed the lid of the coffin and helped him out. He never felt better in his life, and ran about exercising his benumbed limbs. The people believed they had witnessed a miracle. He returned to town and entered the restaurant, hungry for supper, and when the cook and servants saw him come in wrapped in his shroud they rushed out through windows and doors shaking with fright.—Chicago Times.

How Small Yankeedom Is Anyway!

From out of the British isles has come many a ludicrous commentary on affairs American. The Star of Bethlehem, a religious paper, published at Leeds, is the latest candidate in the field of blundering journalism. Here is what it says with reference to the recent industrial disturbances:

"A big revolution is now going on in the United States of America and there is little doubt that the government will be defeated. The dictator, Debs, has been driven from his palace and he and his mistress are now hiding in the mountains. The greatest trouble has been experienced in the capital of Chicago, where Grover Cleveland has obtained complete control. The railroad at that place has been torn up and thrown into the Mississipi river, and the stock yards has been raised to the ground."

Mistakes of Reformers.

When we speak of "financiers" we do not necessarily mean "capitalists." One of the most glaring errors of the advocates of labor interests is to confound the capitalist with the bondholder and money changer. Those who would serve the masses—the laboring class—should learn that they must do so with the assistance of, not in opposition to, the capital that employs; and employing capital suffers as greatly from the rapacity of the money lender as does the laborer himself. It is against the "professional financier," or money broker, and his pliant tools, the susceptible scribblers and legislators, that we would warn our readers, not against the employing capitalist—the owner of mill, or mine, or factory—who, equally with his humblest employe, is being crushed to death beneath the golden chariot.—Blue and Gray.

Electrolysis in Iron Buildings.

The erection of immense iron structures and the enlarged use of iron for outdoor construction is attracting the attention of engineers and scientists, because of the electrolytic effects on the iron. Paints generally do not preserve the iron, and probably the best coating is made from a solution of asphalt and bisulphide of carbon. Sir W. Thompson advises that metal structures be connected by wires with a ball of zinc buried in moist earth.

KNOWLEDGE

Brings comfort and improvement and tends to personal enjoyment when rightly used. The many, who live better than others and enjoy life more, with less expenditure, by more promptly adapting the world's best products to the needs of physical being, will attest the value to health of the pure liquid laxative principles embraced in the remedy, Syrup of Figs.

Its excellence is due to its presenting in the form most acceptable and pleasant to the taste, the refreshing and truly beneficial properties of a perfect laxative; effectually cleansing the system, dispelling colds, headaches and fevers and permanently curing constipation. It has given satisfaction to millions and met with the approval of the medical profession, because it acts on the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels without weakening them and it is perfectly free from every objectionable substance.

Syrup of Figs is for sale by all druggists in 75c. bottles, but it is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, whose name is printed on every package, also the name, Syrup of Figs, and being well informed, you will not accept any substitute if offered.

LANDSEER'S OLD HOME.

WILL SOON BE NOTHING BUT A MEMORY OF THE PAST.

About to be Demolished to Make Room For a Railway—Reminiscences of the Place and its Owner—The Old Gardener Tells of the Place.

The railway companies are on the point of adding one more to their long list of crimes, and in a few days Sir Edwin Landseer's home in St. John's wood road, London, will be a thing of the past. A northern railway is to be cut through St. John's wood, and the two and a half acres of ground that Sir Edwin's old house and garden at present occupy are to be given over to blue tiled, stuccoed villas for the reception of the homeless. It is, no doubt, a prosaic enough reason for doing away with a historic house, and of course the average sentimentalist will rave a good deal and quote largely from Ruskin's most approved passages. But, before calling an indignation meeting, the average sentimentalist is advised to go and see the house. It will probably make him pause in his undertaking. Anything more unlike what one would naturally expect of such an artist's house could not be imagined. It is the color of gray plaster, awkwardly constructed, rambling, and unpardonably commonplace. There is no exaggeration in saying that it passeth the permission of even architectural ugliness. Any ordinary man would have lived in it, but no one but a genius would have been allowed to build it. When an artist designs his own house—as Sir Edwin did his—one at least expects it to have an individuality of its own. But in this case, except for a reproduction on the porch of part of the frieze on the Parthenon, the house differs in no respect from that of an ordinary country gentleman. True, there a few niches at stated intervals in the outside walls, filled with little groups of sculptured figures, but it takes more than that for a house to establish an artistic reputation. As it is, one can easily imagine an ennobled soap boiler walking through the grounds, and dwelling with a smug complacency on its substantial well-to-do appearance.

Of course the house has associations enough, sentimental and otherwise. Landseer bought it in 1825, when he was 23 years old, and lived in it till his death at the age of 71. In those days it was a little farmhouse with six rooms, and, perhaps, a great deal prettier than it is now. In it he painted, probably, not far short of 100 pictures. With the standing exception of Sir Joshua Reynolds' house in Leicester square, it has received within its walls more distinguished visitors than any other artist's house in London. But these associations seem, somehow, to lose their force when one in confronted with its hideousness. As for the inside, the rooms are large and airy and nicely arranged. The studio is on the ground floor, forming an entire wing by itself, with two large side windows, but no skylight. In it Sir Edwin painted for nearly fifty years, clad for the most part in a gray tweed suit and wearing a wide green shade on his eyes. There has been a good deal of talk about painted panels which Sir Edwin was said to have perpetrated. One in particular the queen is reported to have greatly admired. I asked old William Pedder, Sir Edwin's gardener and attendant, about it.

"Well, sir," was his answer, "all I can say is that I was 'ere when the queen came, and that's the door as she came in by."

I looked, expecting to find minature "Monarchs of the Glen" painted all over it, but there was only a streak or two of whitewash visible. It was just such a door as an average man with a moderate list of acquaintances sees about 5,000 times a year. But, then, there is no limit to the immagination of a hardened journalist.

"Would you mind showing me the rustic seat on which Sir Edwin carved his name?" I inquired.

"I never 'eard tell of no such thing, sir," said the honest Pedder, shocked at the mere idea that his late master could ever have played such pranks without his knowledge.

William Pedder is a short, comfortable-looking man with a kindly face and twinkling eyes—a kind of plagiarism from the "old blue-coated servitors" and "faithful retainers" whom one comes across persistently in the novels of fifty years ago. He entered Sir Edwin's service as gardener some thirty-five years ago and remained in it till his master's death. As the man in whose arms Sir Edwin died Will Pedder will have some claim to be remembered by posterity. There is a certain pathos about the relations between the two men in the closing years of Sir Edwin's life, when his mind, worn out by the stress of nearly seventy laborious years, had begun to show unmistakable signs of failing powers.

"About two years before his death," said Pedder, "I was bending over the clump of this tree here when Sir Edwin runs out of the studio up to me and put his hand on my shoulder and says: 'Will you be my friend?' And from that day, sir, I never left him, and he wouldn't let any other man come near him."

Peddler is full of the kindest reminiscences of his master, and shows with pride two or three pictures which Sir Edwin gave him with an affectionate inscription written in a great, ugly, scrawling hand.

In his best days Landseer was an indefatigable diner-out and fond of entertaining at St. John's wood. It is said that at one of these parties his butler entered the drawing-room after dinner and asked in a quite ordinary, matter-of-fact tone: "Did you order a lion, sir?" The guests looked nervously at the door, but Landseer boldly went out and found in the hall a dead lion that had been sent "with the compliments of the secretary of the zoological gardens." A better known anecdote—also located (without proof) at St. John's wood—tells how Sir Edwin once asked Sydney Smith to sit to him, to which the divinely irreverent one answered: "Is thy servant a dog that he should do this thing?" If this is true, it certainly does seem a pity that the house is going to be pulled down.
