International lesson—The reading of the law Josh viii, 30-35.
I have set before you life and death, blessing and cursing—Deut. xxx. 19.

With what awful solemnity that vast concourse listened with breathless silence as those righteous laws were again being enunciated, and as each clause was heard to echo between those mountains, with what intense earnestness was the amen of that united congregation likewise heard to reverberate. The terrible aspect of that economy has passed away, the fire, lightnings and smoke of Sinai has disappeared under the benign influence of the sun of righteousness. Let us in this lesson contrast the sin which we are particularly setting ourselves to have swept away, as it was dealt with under the law, and now under the gentler sway of the Gospel of our tender Saviour. In Deut. xxi. 18, we read that when a father or mother has expostulated in vain, with a son who has given himself up to intoxication, they bring him before the authorities, and in a public place where he has often been seen committing the offence, he meets with a terrible death; but, under the new dispensation, the expostulation is continued, warnings, prayers and entreaties are extended to the last, when either God's long suffering and mercy lead to repentance, or the poor soul lost to all good, has fitted itself to destruction. Young man the choice lies with yourself; obedience is life, disobedience death. Christ's words are verily, verily, I say unto you. He that heareth my words and believeth on him that sent me hath everlasting life and shall not come under condemnation, but is passed from death unto life, Jhn y. 24. Again Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away, and take heed to yourselves lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness and cares of this life, so that that day come upon you unawares, Luke xxi. 34. And be not drunk with wine wherein is excess, but be filled with the spirit, Young men with the intoxicating cup continually in your hand you are deliberately choosing death, and those who are not aiding to stem the tide of iniquity are exposing themselves to the curse which fell upon Merod-ach of old for not coming up to the help of the Lord against the mighty. Let us rather be found enquiring and thirsting after righteousness, then we shall be filled with that, which is life.

The majority move along, conscious that drunkenness is a terrible thing, but unconscious of the fact that there are matters of personal interest and duty connected with it. When the public mind is fully awakened, and the public conscience fully aroused, the demon will be drawn from the earth. Your mind and your conscience are a part of the public mind and conscience.
What is that part which you control doing in the matter?—Chicago Leader and Liberator.

At a recent meeting of the "General Association of Illinois," held at Ottawa, near Chicago, a very able essay on prohibition was read by Dr. Noble. The following points are worthy of consideration: Prohibition has a legitimate place in government. God prohibits, nature prohibits, the moral nature of man prohibits. The principle of prohibition is recognized by men in public politics. States do not tolerate the corruption of youth by the sale of obscene books.

We plead for prohibition in the sacred name of liberty. Good and evil are eternally antagonistic, one can only exist at the others expense, and freedom for the right means suppression of the wrong; liberty for virtue means prison bars for crime, and there the grand ideal of freedom prevails supreme, every man will have the right to do what he chooses, only as far as he chooses to do what is right.—Canada Citizen.

Whatever I may think of the pursuits of industry and science and of the triumphs and glories of art, I do not mention any one of these things as the great specific for alleviating the sorrows of human life, and encountering the evils which deface the world. If I am asked what is the remedy for the deeper sorrows of the human heart what a man should chiefly look to in his progress through life, as the power that is to sustain him under trials and enable him manfully to confront his affections, I must point to something very different, to something which in a well-known hymn is called "the old, old story," told of in an old, old book, and taught with an old, old teaching, which is the greatest gift ever given to mankind.—Gladstone.

The Christian World says that the money spent in four years for alcoholic drinks in Great Britain would purchase all the railways in the country, and in six years would pay off the national debt.

wana are not likely soon to be forgotten.
The death of the Prince Imperial of France,

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

The Temperance Movement, &c.

ST.—My attention was called on yesterday to a letter signed "A Briton," which appeared in your daily issue of the 27th inst. I confess I read it over and over again, and thought it good Sunday reading too; indeed I am willing to concede that there is something remarkably pleasing about the style of composition displayed, all the more so as the author, whoever he may be, discovers a powerful and eloquent pen, which he evidently knows very well, how to use.

Having said so much, which is his due, I also must say that I can hardly agree with all his statements. I am afraid he is on some points a little "too utterly utter." Evidently he has some experience in rum-selling and their ways; and judging by the feeling displayed in his letter, I would imagine that some time or other in his life, he has known all about strong drink and feels it bitterly.

He would have the rum-seller ostracized from the Church and all decent society and class him as "criminal." Although I have no love for him or his business, I am not aware that the rum-seller of to-day, is anything different to the rum-seller of 3 or 4 years ago. Than he was licensed, and had to be in the eyes of the law of respectable character, before he could obtain a license.
No doubt some of those who were licensed to sell liquor, are still in the traffic and carry it on in just the same way, selling the same quality of liquor, to much the same class of customers as they did three or four years ago. If they were not criminal then, how can they be criminal now? I hope "A Briton" will crack this nut for me. I detect the business of rum-selling thoroughly, and judging from the effects of rum-drinking which I sometimes see displayed, I also detect that pernicious habit. Although not a member of any temperance organization, I am happy to be able to say that I am a life long abstainer, utterly ignorant as to the taste of strong drink. I shall remain so with the help of goodness, and keep clear of rum, the rumseller and his "den." At the same time I am not prepared to go the length of some people in their expression of opinion upon the question. What is good society for, if not to elevate those beneath it, and what is the Christian Church for but to snatch the most criminal as brands from the burning? If the rum-seller is a criminal we cannot make him an exception, he too should be embraced in efforts to do good, which could not be the case, were he entirely cast away and cut off from all good influence.

"A Briton" states that the Scott Act "is daily and hourly violated." He states what is perfectly true; even the City Marshall might find that much out, if his eyes were keen enough. THE EXAMINER states in a recent issue, that correspondents rage &c., against the Stipendiary about the violation of the Scott Act, but not one of them will enter prosecution—or words to that effect.
But "A Briton" states "the authorities who should enforce it do not perform their duty." If there are proper authorities, who should perform that duty I conceive that it is not at all necessary for private individuals to trouble themselves in the matter. We want to know who those authorities are, or if there be any authorities to prosecute. Can "A Briton" tell us; for it is just what a good many folks are trying to find out. Either he is correct,
