To the Electors of the First District for King's County for the Legislative Council.

GENTLEMEN,—At the earnest request of a number of you, I offer myself as a candidate to fill the vacancy in the Legislative Council, occasioned by the death of the late Lawrence Kichham, Esq.
I solicit your suffrages on the present occasion in the interest of the Liberal Conservative party; although, if elected, I shall support the present Administration in such measures only as I consider to be for the good of the country. I will not promise to support the present or any other Government, unless I believe them to be administering the affairs of the Province so as to keep down taxation, secure Provincial rights, and promote the general welfare of the people.
Owing to the bad state of the roads at this season of the year, it will, I fear, be impossible for me to make a personal canvass of the entire District; but I trust to be able to meet you at public meetings before the election, when I can more fully give you my views on questions affecting your interests.
Respectfully soliciting your votes, I remain, gentlemen,
Your obedient servant,
CHARLES McEACHEN.

ADAM BEDE.

CHAPTER L.
IN THE COTTAGE.

ADAM did not ask Dinah to take his arm when they got out into the lane. He had never yet done so, often as they had walked together; for he had observed that she never walked arm-in-arm with Seth, and he thought perhaps that kind of support was not agreeable to her. So they walked apart, though side by side, and the close poke of her little black bonnet hid her face from him.

"You can't be happy, then, to make the Hall Farm your home, Dinah?" Adam said, with the quiet interest of a brother, who has never been so anxious for himself in the matter.
"It's a pity, seeing they're so fond of you."
"You know, Adam, my heart is as their heart, so far as love for them and care for their welfare goes; but they are in no present need, their sorrows are healed, and I feel that I am called back to my old work, in which I found a blessing that I have missed of late in the midst of too abundant worldly good. I know it is a vain thought to flee from the work that God appoints us, for the sake of finding a greater blessing to our souls, as if we could choose for ourselves where we shall find the fulness of the Divine Presence, instead of seeking it where alone it is to be found, in loving obedience. But now, I believe, I have a clear showing that my work lies elsewhere—at least for a time. In the years to come, if my aunt's health should fail, or if she should otherwise need me, I shall return."

"You know best, Dinah," said Adam.
"I don't believe you'd go against the wishes of them that love you, and are akin to you, without a good and sufficient reason in your conscience. I've no right to say any thing about my being sorry; you know well enough what cause I have to put you above every other friend I've got; and if it had been ordered so that you could ha' been my sister, and lived with us all our lives, I should ha' counted it the greatest blessing as could happen to us now; but Seth tells me there's no hope o' that; your feelings are different; and perhaps I'm taking too much upon me to speak about it."

Dinah made no answer and they walked on in silence for some yards, till they came to the stone stile; where, as Adam had passed through first, and turned round to give her his hand while she mounted the unusually high step, she could not prevent him from seeing her face. It struck him with surprise; for the gray eyes, usually so mild and grave, had the bright uneasy glance which accompanies suppressed agitation, and the slight flush on her cheeks, with which she had come down stairs, was heightened to a rose-bud color. She looked as if she were only sister to Dinah.
Adam was silent with surprise and conjecture for some moments, and then he said,

"I hope I've not hurt or displeased you by what I've said, Dinah; perhaps I was making too free. I've no wish different from what you see to the best; and I'm satisfied for you to live thirty mile off, if you think it right. I shall think of you just as much as I do now; for you're bound up with what I can no more help remembering than I can help my heart beating." Poor Adam! Thus do men blunder.
Dinah made no answer, but presently she
said,

"Have you heard any news from that poor young man since we last spoke of him?"

"Yes," said Adam. "Mr. Irwine read me part of a letter from him yesterday. It's pretty certain, they say, that there'll be a peace soon, though nobody believes it'll last long; but he says he doesn't mean to come home. He's no heart for it yet; and it's better for others that he should keep away. Mr. Irwine thinks he's in the right not to come. It's a sorrowful letter. He asks about you and the Poyzers, as he always does. There's one thing in the letter that cuts me a good deal: 'You can't think what an old fellow I feel,' he says; 'I make no schemes now. I'm the best when I've a good day's march or fighting before me.'"

"He's of a rash, warm-hearted nature, like Esau, for whom I have always felt great pity," said Dinah. "That meeting between the brothers, where Esau is so loving and generous, and Jacob so timid and dis-trusting, notwithstanding his sense of the Divine favor, has always touched me greatly. Truly, I have been tempted sometimes to say, that Jacob was of a mean spirit. But that is our trial: we must learn to see the good in the midst of much that is unlovely."

"Ah!" said Adam, "I like to read about Moses, best, in the Old Testament. He carried a hard business well through, and died when other folks were going to reap the fruits; a man must have courage to look at his life so, and think what'll come of it after he's dead and gone. A good solid bit o' work lasts; if it's only laying a floor down, somebody's the better for it being done well, besides the man as does it."

They were both glad to talk of subjects that were not personal, and in this way they went on till they passed the bridge across thy Willow Brook, when Adam turned round and said,

"Ah! here's Seth. I thought he'd be home soon. Does he know of your going, Dinah?"

"Yes, I told him last Sabbath."
(To be continued.)

A Wonderful Operation

MUSCLE FROM A DOG'S LEG GRAFTED ON A LAUNDRESS' ARM.

The New York Bellevue Hospital physicians are just now exchanging congratulations over the successful result of a remarkable operation in "muscle-grafting," the first of the kind ever attempted in this country. The operation consists in transferring a bunch of muscular tissue from a dog or other animal to any member of a human frame that may be incapacitated through the want of such tissue.

At Bellevue Hospital the dog was a mongrel and the patient a laundress. The latter seriously injured her right arm while at work in the laundry, and five weeks ago went to the hospital to be cured. A large section of the muscular substance between the elbow and the wrist was dead, and the sufferer could hardly raise her arm and could not use her fingers at all. Dr. Halsted, visiting surgeon of the hospital, saw that the injury could not be cured except by the operation of muscle grafting. It was announced, therefore, that the operation would be attempted, and at the appointment a crowd of students was present in the amphitheatre to witness it.

The dog was put under the influence of ether. The skin of the wounded arm was laid open and dissected back. The ends of the divided muscles were then found and cut off so as to freshen them. Meanwhile one of the dog's hind legs had been shaven, and as soon as the arm was ready, a section of muscular tissue, about four inches long and two inches wide was cut from the dog's leg, transferred to her arm and fitted to the divided ends of the muscles. The skin of the arm was then replaced and sutured together.

The operation lasted about half an hour.
Three weeks after it was performed the patient found herself able to use her fingers with little difficulty. Since then she has improved so much that the doctors say she will leave the hospital in a few days quite cured.

Dr. Hazleton, the house surgeon at the hospital was very reticent in regard to the case, and would only say that the girl's recovery was complete.

The Loss of an Empire.

The Russian papers are overjoyed at Sir Peter Lumsden's recall. History justifies their satisfaction.

In the year 1744 Clive and Duplex were contending for the mastery of India. Their chances of success were evenly balanced.
Acting on fatal advice, France recalled Duplex. By that recall she lost India.

England to-day recalls Sir Peter Lumsden.
So the two Russian papers remember Duplex, and laugh.—New York Herald.

CURRENT NOTES.

Codfish is forty cents per pound in Guatemala and is considered a great delicacy. That's where the phrase "codfish aristocracy" possesses some significance.

Gaus, the illustrious German astronomer, has computed the attracting or lifting power of the earth at 43,310,000,000,000-000,000 tons. If this magnetism were equally distributed throughout the mass of earth the magnetic intensity of each cubic yard would be equal to about sixty pounds attractive force.

Mr. John Jacob Astor has just presented to the Astor Library three manuscripts, which are probably the oldest classical works to be found in any collection in this country. They include Herold's "Works and Days," "Esop's Fables," and Lucan's "Pharsalia," and were formerly a part of the private library of Pope Pius VI., who occupied the Vatican from 1775 to 1798.

The Howard family, of Kentucky, consisting of father, mother, six sons and three daughters, is said never to have been equalled. The mother, the shortest of the family, was six feet in height, and weighed 285 pounds. The others ranged from 6 feet 2 inches in height to 6 feet 11 1/2 inches, and in weight from 160 to 266 pounds.
Taken as a totality their height was seventy feet, and weight 2,298 pounds.

The Esquimaux of Labrador have a tradition that the Greenland Esquimaux came originally from Canada and settled on the outermost islands of the coast, but never penetrated into the country before they were driven eastward to Greenland. This report gains some credit from the state and position in which some ruins are found.
They consist of remains of walls and a grave, with a low stone enclosure around the tomb, covered with a slab of the same material. They have been discovered on islands near Nain and all along the whole eastern coast, but none were found in Ungava Bay.

Professor Blackie is not the only eccentric master the young men of Edinburgh University have had over them. Professor Christison—whose son became eminent in the Edinburgh Medical School—once having caught a student winking in his Latin class ordered him to stand up, and spoke as follows:—"No smirking, no smiling, and above all, no tipping of the wink; for such things are hurtful to yourselves, baneful to the public, and will bring down the grey hairs of your parents with sorrow to the grave. Hum! by the way, that's a very pretty sentence; turn it into Latin, sir."

A recent voyager writes: "These Isles of Greece are lovely—they are all Byron sang of them and more. Nature has lavished the vine, the cypress, the myrtle, the intoxication, the sadness, and the love of life, but a line in Bishop Heber's missionary hymn expressed what humanity has done for the land. "But only man is vile!" deceitful, thieving, lazy, grandilo-quent in sentiment, courageous in imagination, pusillanimous in action, treacherous in friendship, these are the general characteristics of the Islanders among whom we lingered for many days. "How are the mighty fallen!" was our daily comment."
