

No Cure for... Bright's Disease

In its advanced stages—The Reason Why—Danger Prevented by the Timely Use of Dr. A. W. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

To understand Bright's Disease is to know that in its advanced stages it is past the reach of human aid. The cells of the kidneys undergo a wasting change, which leaves them dead so far as performing their functions is concerned. Just think of having the kidneys dead. Think of the poisons left in the system when these organs could no longer perform their duties as filters of the blood.

It would be difficult to conceive of anything more dreadful, and yet this is the goal to which every case of neglected kidney disease must lead. When the back aches, when urinating is difficult or too frequent, when there are deposits in the urine after standing for 24 hours, there is no time to lose in procuring Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

It is not claimed that they will cure Bright's Disease in its last stages. They are an absolute cure for kidney disease, and so long as the kidneys are not entirely wasted away they will give new strength and vigor and enable them to resume their duties of filtering the blood.

Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills will stop backache and headache in short order by removing the cause, and will positively prevent Bright's Disease. One pill a dose, 25c. a box. At all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

Professor Gilman was introduced to Simon Hopper by Rice as the detective who was to represent the friends of Damon in the case. Hopper had heard of Professor Gilman and looked upon him now with some awe. The professor took no notice of that, however, but said: "If you don't mind, I should like to examine those articles."

"You saw this suit upon the dead man, did you?" he inquired, peering over his spectacles at Hopper.

"Yes, sir; this is the suit the murdered man had on, sir," replied the detective.

"Ah, you've already settled in your mind that the man was murdered, have you?" inquired the professor.

"I should say there was small doubt of that, sir," replied Hopper, with a little laugh.

Professor Gilman held up one article of clothing after another and looked them over with critical eyes. They were parts of a brown suit.

"You recognize this suit as one worn by Mr. Damon, do you?" he asked of Rice.

"Yes; I've seen him in it dozens of times."

Hopper took up the vest and, turning the buckle strap inside out, silently held it up for the professor's inspection. There, where the tailor had written the purchaser's name, the professor read "M. L. Damon" and the name and address of the tailor.

"Ah!" said the professor. "That mark is important. It identifies the clothing very well."

"And this ring," he said, holding up an intaglio ring, graven with the initial "D" in old English—"do you recognize this as one worn by Damon?"

"Yes," said Rice.

The professor was examining the inside of the ring. "Oh, here are the initials," he said, "M. L. D. That stands for M. Luther Damon. Well, there seems to be pretty good evidence that this ring belonged to Damon. It was on the hand of the body when you found it, was it?" he asked of Hopper.

"Yes, sir, on the third finger," said the detective.

"And this cardcase," continued the professor, picking up one more article—"this was in the vest pocket, was it?"

The detective replied affirmatively. "Mr. Martin Luther Damon," read the professor, drawing forth one of the cards. There were a half dozen others in the case, and the professor glanced at each.

"And were these the only articles found in the pockets?" Professor Gilman inquired.

"Yes; nothing else was found," replied Hopper.

"No watch, keys, pocketbook, pocketknife, money?" queried he.

"No."

"No pocket handkerchief?"

"No."

The professor laid down the cardcase

In the old frontier days hundreds of pioneers were tortured and burned at the stake by cruel Indians. The tortures endured by these martyrs must have been something horrible. There are thousands of men to-day who are being slowly tortured to death at the stake of disease.

Their bodies cry out but in a language that only the sufferers themselves can hear. When a man is suffering in this way his body cries out with an aching head, a sluggish body, muscles that are lax and lazy, a brain that is dull, a stomach that disdains food and nerves that will not rest. A wise man will heed these warnings and will resort to the right remedy before it is too late. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery makes the appetite keen and hearty. It invigorates the liver. It promotes the natural processes of secretion and excretion. It makes the digestion and assimilation perfect. It purifies the blood and fills it with the life-giving elements of the food. It tears down old and worn-out tissues and replaces them with the firm, muscular tissues of health. It is the great blood-maker and flesh-builder. It is the best nerve tonic. It cures 98 per cent. of all cases of consumption, weak lungs, bronchitis, lingering coughs and kindred ailments. Found at all medicine stores. Accept no substitute that may be represented as "just as good." The "just as good" kind doesn't effect cures like the following:

"Twenty-five years ago eight different doctors told me that I would live but a short time, that I had consumption and must die," writes Geo. R. Coope, Esq., of Myers Valley, Pottawatomie Co., Kan. "I finally commenced taking Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and am still in the land and among the living."

Don't suffer from constipation. Keep the body clean inside as well as outside. Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets cure constipation and biliousness. They never gripe. All good dealers have them.

and turned toward the silent object lying under the white sheet. The sheet outlined a human form, all save the head. That was missing.

"Would you like to take a look at it, sir?" asked the undertaker.

The professor was silent a moment. "No, I think not," he said and turned toward the door.

In the street outside Rice and Sexton said they had an errand at the college buildings and parted from the professor. That gentleman walked for a full square toward the boarding house in Somerset street and then, deliberately ly, as if it had been his intention from the first, turned and retraced his steps. He re-entered the undertaker's establishment, and it was fully 15 minutes before he came forth once more. This time he walked directly toward his boarding place.

"And this ring?" he said, holding up an intaglio ring.

When he reached the house, he started to ascend the steps. Then he paused and glanced at his watch. It was only a little past 4. Turning away, he walked to the next corner. A few steps more brought him to 826 Wallace street.

A pretty servant girl answered his ring. Professor Gilman looked benignly at her through his spectacles.

"I am Professor Gilman," he said, "and am interested in knowing all that I can learn about the disappearance of the unfortunate young man who boarded here."

"Yes, sir," said the young woman. Her lips trembled a little as she spoke, and she looked troubled. The professor did not seem to notice it, but said pleasantly: "I am told that a young woman employed here answered a ring at the door last Wednesday night and saw a man who asked for Mr. Damon. Perhaps you are the person."

"Yes, sir," repeated the girl.

"Well, my informant explained to me that you found it very difficult to describe the man's appearance owing to the fact that the evening was dark and that he seemed to seek to remain in shadow as much as possible."

"Yes, sir," the girl said again.

"I am told that you feel certain of only one thing, and that is that the caller was quite tall—considerably above the average."

"Ye-es, sir," the girl said hesitatingly, shifting her weight from one foot to the other as she leaned a little against the half open door.

"Am I right in understanding that while you could not feel certain about it it is nevertheless your impression that the man had a smooth face and that from his appearance you should judge him to be not over 31 or 32 years old?"

"I—I think so, sir," stammered the girl, and then added in confusion "No, sir—that is, I can't tell, sir. It was dark, and the man stood back out of the light."

"Exactly," said the professor, as coolly as if he had not just surprised her into giving a much more accurate description of the mysterious caller than the police had got from her.

"I must beg your pardon for keeping you at the door to answer so many questions," he continued, with a politeness that was pleasing to the girl. "Is your—the lady of the house—her name has slipped me for the moment."

"Mrs. Mayer," interposed the girl.

"Ah, yes, Mrs. Mayer! Is she in?"

"No, sir; she has gone down town this afternoon."

"Do you think there would be any objection to my going up to Mr. Damon's room for a few moments?"

Professor Gilman was not at all the sort of man to awaken distrust, and the girl answered quite promptly, evidently relieved that the talk had drifted away from the case of the disappeared man.

"I will wait for you, sir, in the room."

The professor walked

ed over to a door that seemed to lead to a closet. "Please remain near enough to see that I don't take anything," he said, with one of his wintry smiles, as he opened the door and peered into the closet.

The girl watched him wonderingly, a little doubtful whether this mild-mannered elderly gentleman was in quite his right mind.

"There seems to be only one suit of clothes here," said the professor, "and this is a heavy winter suit. Do you remember whether Mr. Damon has worn more than one kind of suit recently?"

"Yes, sir; sometimes he wore a brown suit, and sometimes a black coat and vest and gray pants."

"You don't know which suit he had on when he left the house Wednesday night, do you?"

"No, sir; I didn't see him when he went out. I came up to the room and told him Mr.—I told him a man wanted to see him down at the door, and then I went back into the kitchen."

"Well, neither the brown nor the black suit appears to be hanging in his closet. You don't know of one having been removed by any one since the disappearance of the young man, do you?"
