Beavers And St. Mary's Play Opener Saturday

HALIFAX, March 2 (CP)—Saint John Beavers and Halifax St. Mary's will clash here Saturday in the first game of a best-of-seven series for the championship of the Maritime Senior Hockey League.

The playoff dates were announced today by Judge J. Elliott Hudson, president of the league, who said the second game will be played here Monday, March 6 with the third and fourth games in Saint John Thursday March 9 and Saturday March 11.

If other games are necessary, the fifth will be played in Halifax March 13, the sixth will be in Saint John, Wednesday March 15, and the seventh in Halifax on either Friday or Saturday of the same week.

If the teams are tied at the end of three periods in any game they will play a 10-minute overtime period. If they're still tied, Mr. Hudson said, they'll play up to two 10-minute sudden-death overtime periods.

The winners of the series meet the winners of the Cape Breton League in the Maritime playoffs.

fewer to report that there are cases of delinquent children. Credit for this may be claimed for the program of physical fitness, also because conditions immediately following the war were more serious than they are at present.

Federal Health Grants

He paid tribute to the work of the Planning Commission under Dr. Harold Shaw, which advises the Provincial Department in connection with Federal health grants. He warmly thanked the Opposition leader, Dr. MacMillan, who represents the medical profession on the Commission, for his co-operation at all times.

The present of the Province's allotment under the grant has been taken up by Mr. Matheson reported. The Island led every Province of Canada in this respect.

With respect to Provincial grants to hospitals, he said there had been no change this year. The Department is still paying 75 cents per patient day.

The question of hospital costs, maintenance and construction is a very important one at the present time. The proposal of having small nursing homes built in some parts of the Province is being considered. These would be 7-bed homes and would cost approximately $20,000, which amount some $7,000 would be provided by the Provincial Government, $7,000 by the Federal Government and the balance by the community. The question being considered is how many of these homes should be made available in the Province. Maintenance costs are a matter for the communities to take into careful consideration.

Mr. Matheson said that in some Provinces, notably Alberta, it has been found inexpedient to take up the small hospital scheme at all.

He emphasized the value of health centres, and said the setup in connection with these centres is favorable in all circumstances. The new wing of the Charlottetown Hospital, recently opened, is a credit to the Province and the Minister congratulated all concerned with its construction. He was unable to say, at present, how much the institution would receive under the Federal - Provincial grants. The money has not yet been allotted, although all the plans are in the hands of the Dominion architects.

In Summerside the construction of the new Prince County Hospital is also proceeding. It may be easier to reduce to figures the amount that will be granted in this case, because it is a new building.

The Prince Edward Island Hospital is constructing a small addition this year, and the amount available under the Federal grant is something under $20,000.

Surris has made application for additional assistance in construction of a hospital building, the amount being still undecided.

The Alberton Hospital has also a claim on the grants, which is being worked out by Federal accountants. This institution was opened about a month after the grants were announced.

Mr. Matheson said that in some of the patients will not "stay put," Mr. Matheson said. They come in for treatment and take every opportunity of getting out irregularly, sometimes visiting the liquor seller before returning. This has a bad influence on other patients as well as interfering with their treatment. It is intended to make the basement available for patients every attention will be under stricter discipline.

The Minister gave details of the activities of the Tuberculosis League. Through its sale of seals, this organization has done a great deal of work. They are now being assisted in the way of financial grants, but there is still an important place in the Province for a voluntary organization of this kind.

Replying to a question by Dr. MacMillan, the Minister said there were still people who neglected taking the X-ray examinations. The question was whether the examination should be made compulsory.

In the matter of mental health, he regretted that more progress has not been made. The few nurses for male patients at Falconwood have provided some relief, but there is still overcrowding. When the proposed active treatment centre is built the condition will be much improved. There was still great difficulty in obtaining trained psychiatrists.

In venereal disease, the incidence is considerably lower than it has been for some years, Mr. Matheson reported.

Eggs and Poultry

There is no apparent increase in production of eggs in Prince Edward Island. Quality of eggs is good and demand for the product excellent. All supplies are moving to Maritime consuming centers. Prices have increased on Pullet and Grade B eggs and operators of grading stations are quoting for ungraded eggs: AL 32-3, AM 30-1, AP 24, B 24, C 19. Wholesalers are quoting station operators for the graded pack F. O. B. station: AL 37, AM 35, AP 29, B 29, C 24.

Wholesalers quoting retailers for graded eggs: AL 39, AM 37, AP 32, B 32, C 27.

Eggs retailing to consumers at: AL 44-5, AM 40-2, AP 37, B 36-40, C 33.

There is no activity in the poultry market.

Feeds

The price of feed grain continues to advance and the general opinion at the mills is that oats will probably go higher before the price levels off. The stormy weather in the West and slow deliveries at Lake Head with a continued strong demand, are the reasons given for this increase.

The closing quotation last night on No. 1 feed oats was $2.72 per hundred in bulk, carlot, delivered.

Training

Guide and Brownie Leaders are reminded that the training course is commencing on Monday, March 6th, at Trinity Hall 6.45 p.m. and all are requested to be there.

A Brownie "Thank You"

The Brownies give a big "Thank you" to Mr. Willard Jordan of Parkdale who kindly allowed a free skate on Saturday afternoon last. The ice was reported splendid and the rink, which is located behind the New Method, an ideal skating spot.

1st Central Royalty Guides

The Field Secretary was invited to a delightful supper at the home of Mrs. Preston Beck and given by the C. Royalty Glee Club, who are the sponsors of Guiding in that area. The Guides did full justice to the grand spread which was served by Mrs. Agnew and Mrs. Major MacRae and of course Mrs. Beck who seemed to be everywhere. After supper gades were played until it was time for home. Mrs. Helen Love, who will be shortly receiving her Warrant, and the Guides thanked the Ladies for the meal and also Mrs. Jenkins although all the latter did was to eat and join in the fun. Saturday evening was a real gala one for Guiding and it is certain that they fully appreciated the efforts made on their behalf.

1st Montague Guide Company

The first time for some months Montague Guides hit the News with a "Bang". Along the cold snowy roads went Mrs. Jenkins on Tuesday last, but the lovely friendly welcome was most warming on arrival. The Guides and Leaders that made the trip worth while. Enrollment of new Guides and Investiture of Patrol Leaders and Seconds were the main objects of the visit but quite a lot of work was done and many games were sandwiched in. Those enrolled were Mildred Murphy, Leah Burke, Judy Wigginton, Pauline Nicholson, Cepheria Lowelley and Judy Graham. Patrol Leaders receiving stripes were Mary McEwen, Gerry Sullivan and Eileen Clare, Patrol Leaders and Guides were very smart and presented a fine appearance. Marching for Horseshoe formation and introductions to Mrs. Jenkins were carried out in the correct manner and top points were awarded for inspection. After the enrolment and routing game of Poor House was joined in with much enthusiasm. The Health test was discussed and charts distributed. These will be completed in four weeks and will be returned with suggested menus containing correct foods to eat for a well balanced diet. (Do not forget those raw vegetables, carrots, cabbage and even a hardy potato, but his father had been a failure also. Like father, like son, he figured. With no money, no influence, no contacts, and no education, how was he ever to get anywhere?

Unspoken Thought

"Let's face it," I continued. You've been doing the same kind of work for sixteen years at about the same salary. You're in a rut. I want to help you work up to a more responsible job.

Frank was stiff and unbending. At the mention of salary, I could sense his unspoken thought, "It's your fault for not paying me more."

Since Frank was so shy and suspicious of my interest in him, I knew a series of talks would be necessary to loosen him up. Then, after several such discussions came an admission.

"Mr. Glossinger," he said, "it's just no use. I never had enough education to make anything of myself."

So this was the cause of his feelings of inferiority!

Little by little I managed to piece out his story. Not only did he feel that his lack of education was too big a handicap, but his father had been a failure also. Like father, like son, he figured. With no money, no influence, no contacts, and no education, how was he ever to get anywhere?

"A Higher Power"

Frank was discouraged and gloom. I was baffled. It was a hot day and the heat in my office was most oppressive. Frank's collar was open and then I noticed a gold chain around his neck.

At the end of the chain was a cross.

"Frank," I said, suddenly struck with an idea, "Whenever I am in deep trouble or have a problem I cannot solve, I always go to a Higher Power for help. I have never failed to get help when I do this. Now I want to make you a proposition."

A faint sign of interest cracked Frank's expressionless face.

"Tonight before you go to bed I want you to pray for the answer."

FINDING THE HIDDEN SUCCESS SPARK

By John Glossinger

A clerk who never earned more than $36 per week in sixteen years with his firm suddenly capitalizes on hidden abilities and soon is making $10,000 a year. What happened? John Glossinger, retired president of the Kny-Scheerer Corporation, and author of the volume, "You Are Born To Victory," shows how a person can find himself and master the secret of personal victory.

During my thirty eight years in business I have received many real thrills from my work in helping people to develop their own abilities.

One outstanding fact impressed me above all others—that a great, if not the greatest, asset in a business organization is the hidden power inherent in the men and women who compose it. The big job in bringing out this hidden potential is to crack shells—shells of fear, timidity, or inferiority.

A 32-year-old man, whom we will call Frank, proved to be one of the most unapproachable men I ever tried to arouse to achievement. He had been with the company for sixteen years as a clerk. At the end of this time he was making $36 a week.

Shy, unresponsive, gloom, he never spoke to anyone unless spoken to. At quitting time he would vanish without even a good-bye. He could never be persuaded to attend Christmas parties or any other social affairs among his fellow workers.

I was impressed by several of his qualities. He had integrity and he did his job conscientiously. One day I called him into my office.

"Frank," I said, "you have the qualities to get ahead in this business. I'd like to help you make something of yourself."

He looked at me quickly as much as to say, "What's your angle, brother? Why pick on me?"

"Let's face it," I continued. You've been doing the same kind of work for sixteen years at about the same salary. You're in a rut. I want to help you work up to a more responsible job.

Frank was stiff and unbending. At the mention of salary, I could sense his unspoken thought, "It's your fault for not paying me more."

Since Frank was so shy and suspicious of my interest in him, I knew a series of talks would be necessary to loosen him up. Then, after several such discussions came an admission.

"Mr. Glossinger," he said, "it's just no use. I never had enough education to make anything of myself."

So this was the cause of his feelings of inferiority!

Little by little I managed to piece out his story. Not only did he feel that his lack of education was too big a handicap, but his father had been a failure also. Like father, like son, he figured. With no money, no influence, no contacts, and no education, how was he ever to get anywhere?

"A Higher Power"

Frank was discouraged and gloom. I was baffled. It was a hot day and the heat in my office was most oppressive. Frank's collar was open and then I noticed a gold chain around his neck.

At the end of the chain was a cross.

"Frank," I said, suddenly struck with an idea, "Whenever I am in deep trouble or have a problem I cannot solve, I always go to a Higher Power for help. I have never failed to get help when I do this. Now I want to make you a proposition."

A faint sign of interest cracked Frank's expressionless face.

"Tonight before you go to bed I want you to pray for the answer."

to the problem we've been trying to work out. You and I will both pray to Almighty God for His help. Frank's face lit up with real understanding. This was something in line with his strong religious training. The idea of taking his problems to God appealed to him. I had finally struck a responsive chord in this man—through his religion.

During the next few weeks I made it a point to watch Frank closely. There were signs of improvement. Little things. He was more friendly to his fellow employees.

The Shell Cracks

Then one day he came to work with a box in his hand. Self-consciously, he entered the main office of typists, clerks and secretaries, then took off the wrapping—around a box of candy. Nervously he placed the box on a central table with an attempt at casualness. Hardly any of the employees had even noticed him.

"Here's some candy for anyone who wants it."

He said it so naively that almost no one heard him. But one typist did. "Why, Frank," she said, "is this for us? How Nice!"

Heads popped up all over the room. They looked at Frank in amazement. Frank, his face a bright crimson, hastily retreated to his desk and buried himself with some papers to hide his embarrassment.

During the next weeks Frank continued to expand his personality. He began to say "Good mornings" and "Good nights" to his fellow workers. Again little things. But like the box of candy, they all added up.

A Boost

Then one day I called him in to tell him we were ready for the next step. "Frank, we are going to make a salesman out of you. You're going out on the road."

At this he grew pale. "Oh, no," he could never do that. I can't talk to you now—but not to strangers."

I stopped him short. "We've started something, Frank. You can't turn back now. You have got to go on."

Then I called in one of my salesmen and explained to him that he was to take Frank with him on his next trip. Frank was to learn how to approach customers, how to talk and how to sell our products.

Their trip took them through New England, New York and Pennsylvania. Finally, there was just one more city left—Wheeling, W. Va. According to my pre-arranged instructions, the salesman broke the news to Frank in Pittsburgh.

"Frank," he said, "you will have to cover Wheeling yourself. You know the routine well enough now. I've got to go back to New York today."

His World Collapsed

Frank later confessed to me that when the salesman left him, the world suddenly collapsed around him. "There I was, four hundred miles from home, all alone," he said. "I was scared stiff. Then I remembered your suggestion that whenever there was a tough problem to solve, you consulted a Higher Power. I had done this before, and it had helped me. I did it then. The next morning I went on to Wheeling."

To Frank's surprise the customers received him kindly and graciously. He ended up with several fine orders. When he walked out of the last establishment, the old shell around him fell off completely.

It isn't necessary to add that today Frank is in the $10,000 a year bracket.

In every man there is some unknown spark which, if ignited, can transform a failure into a success. With Frank it was his religion. I am sure many others can be reached in the same way. The potentials are in every person, provided he or she has integrity and energy.

TOMORROW—Are science and religion compatible? Dr. Gustavus J. Esselen, research chemist, believes they are in complete harmony. His story tells why.
