MARY HAWORTH

Advice Is Given Wife To Obtain Agency Advice

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am 66 and look about 50. I have been married twice - my first husband died in 1928 - and have reared six children. All are married and doing well. I have three daughters by the first marriage and three sons by the second marriage. One son is a policeman, another is a college student working part-time, and the third is employed full time and studying law. I am of Irish - Negro descent. I spent the first two years of my life in an orphanage. Then I was adopted by parents who died when I was age 6, after which a family friend of theirs took me in. When she passed away, she left me with a friend of hers, with whom I lived until I married, at 17.

The circumstances of my history have caused me to be self-reliant. With my second husband, I worked and skimped to buy a comfortable house in the suburbs. He took little interest - just signed the papers. I painted, redecorated, refurbished the place from top to bottom alone, after work, evenings.

Meanwhile I struggled hard to get the children a good basic education - the girls, too. But the problem is, because of my husband's alcoholism and recent threats on my life, I've had to leave my snug house and take refuge with my youngest son, newly married. His wife won't accept me fully, yet I don't know where else to go and I don't want to make trouble for my son; he is a true boy.

My husband has become irritable. He would waken me, rightly, to tell me of his plans to take my life. Night after night, I ran to neighbor after neighbor, at 2 and 3 a.m., until I felt so exhausted that I just moved out.

What can I do? I could still go to business (I look young enough, though I am growing older). I don't want a scandal, as my children are getting ahead in their fields. Yet it seems unfair to be shut out of my home while my husband stays, especially since we wouldn't own a house if I hadn't done so much to acquire it.

Please help me with suggestions if you can. I can't go on like this. My family doesn't know I am writing you; I have always read your column and you seem so understanding. Thanks for listening. G. L.

Another sound step at this time is to prepare a memorandum - perhaps in the form of a sworn (notarized) statement giving dates and details for the alarming events that led to your panicky departure from home. Ask your consultants aforementioned to advise you on the wording.

To sum up, then, proceed along these lines. Meanwhile stay with your son until the storm clears, even if his wife's hospitality is given grudgingly.

ELLEN'S DIARY

Our Days At The Fair Were Full Of Interest

And so mile after sunny mile, the car carried us on our way. "Oh dear!" the younger lad at length sighed, being somewhat weary.

"Better have a nap" his mother suggested. "But I can't! If I did I might miss seeing something along the way. I'd love to see a deer" he said wistfully.

"Me too?" the driver grinned. "Though I doubt that we should see if the same way!"

And then, past the arresting beauty of gray stone, and homes set down in intriguing niches of cliffs, and artistically wooded and tailored garden-spots on the route which leads Islanders in to the historic city, we came to the Fair. We gave the heifer and her little daughter a re-assuring pat. She smiled and shook her head.

"We may 'place' in the show, us creatures from a little Island farm, but it's not going to be easy as I see it," she said.

"Just a minute and I will be with you" Mack engaged in tending an animal down the line of stock called. "Now tell me" he said presently, "how are things going at home?"

The days of our visit were full. It so happened that when the various attractions of the Fair palled, we were entertained at the homes of friends, and kin. Most hospitably, we remember, by a Service couple and their interesting family. They had spent a happy remembered spell of service on the Island in years gone. Here the children had attended a district school, making many friends. What queries there were about their former playmates, and all those who had contributed to make their Island sojourn a happy stay. Truly the anecdotes that folks do for the stranger within their gates, live long in the heart of those to whom the kindness is extended.

One lady, kin to our companions, a Newfoundlander by birth and rearing, also gave us the keys to her adopted city and home. English with a dash of Irish, for added charm and the chuckle, this woman is, and altogether kind. Dark-eyed, tallish the wife of a business executive, she too is a busy person, a secretary in a Maritime firm.

And now our vacation was drawing to a close. The heifer and calf had done fairly well in competition at the Fair in behalf of this island farm. We must go home. Our visit had been enjoyable. We left with some regret. We should have liked to become better acquainted with the city. By day in its mellow late-autumn dress it was charming. At night beautiful indeed when decked out in its jewels of lights. Yet how light were the car's wheels when once more they paced off the Island's roads.

We were returning to our Island farm, to re-enter again the old familiar paths. We would have the bastards' crows for our waking, the Fall sunshine breaking along the fields. The moon would rise for us above the barns' gables, and the morning star light us to another new day.

Until tomorrow - - - Diary - - - Good-night. . . .

High Pear Pie Praise Does Not Mince Words

BY IDA BAILEY ALLEN

This is a pie-loving country. Apple pie has always been our favorite dessert, possibly because so many apples were grown that apple pies were served as a matter of course. Mince pie has always been traditional for special sessions of the year.

But now - with pears a big fruit crop - a new pie appears on the culinary horizon. It is somewhat like mince, but based on pears.

Measurements level PEAR AND RAISIN MINCEMEAT (Enough for three 8" pies) 5 lb. fresh pears 1 lb. seedless raisins 2 lb. (4 c.) sugar 1/2 c. cider vinegar 2 tsp. ground cinnamon 2 tsp. ground cloves 1 1/2 tsp. ground nutmeg 1 1/2 tsp. ground allspice 1 tsp. salt Wash and peel pears; pat through food chopper, using coarse blade. Measure pears (approximately 8 c.) into 3-qt. saucepan and add remaining ingredients. Simmer - cook until mixture is thick and pears are transparent (about 1 1/2 hr.); stir often. Ladle into hot sterilized jars. Seal at once. Use for making pies and tarts.

SUNDAY DINNER Chilled Cider or Cran-Apple Juice Roast Duckling with Orange-Rice (previously columned) Leaf Spinach Vinaigrette Sauce (Passed) Pear and Raisin Mincemeat Pie or Fresh Pears with Cream Cheese for Spreading

COFFEE, TEA Milk TOMORROW'S DINNER Fresh Vegetable Clam Stew, Crisp Crackers - Canned Salmon - Celery - Egg Salad on Shredded Lettuce, Cornbread Squares - Applesauce with Assorted Cookies (previously columned or purchased).

FRESH VEGETABLE-CLAM STEW 1/2 c. each cooked, diced green beans, thin-sliced peeled carrots, diced celery and small strips seeded sweet green peppers 1 1/2 c. water 1/2 tsp. Tabasco 3/4 tsp. salt 1/4 tsp. Oregano 2 c. tomato juice 2 (8 oz.) cans chopped clams and their juice 3 tsp. minced parsley, for garnish Add cooked vegetables to water and boil 5 min. Stir in Tabasco, salt and oregano, then the tomato juice. Bring to boil. Stir in chopped clams and liquid. Simmer-broil 5 min. Ladle into soup plates; parsley is the garnish. Serves 6.

THE CHEF LIKES DUCK Duck has always been considered a glamour food. Today the price compares favorably with that of chicken. Duck can be used to the last bite - and the proportion of duck meat to bone is high. For example, the meat can be stripped from the frame and added to a tossed Chef's salad. The framework can then be cooked with quick barley and omelets of vegetables in water to cover to make a soup seasoned with minced herb. Duck today is a very good budgetwise buy.
