In Parliament

(C. P. by Guardian's Special Wire) OTTAWA, May 26—Finance Minister Dunning dropped a hint in the House of Commons today of a change in the act regulating the Tariff Board in order to guard against budget leaks.

The law, as passed three or four years ago, stipulated reports on appeals made to the board by the Finance Minister must be tabled within 15 days of the opening of Parliament. Both this government and the last one have accepted changes recommended by the board.

The Finance Minister said a board report, tabled several days before the budget, could be used as the basis for speculation. Considering the fact the government invariably accepted the recommendations, it would be betting on a sure thing. He was not prepared to say he would change the act but he thought the situation was a dangerous one, considering the necessity for secrecy on the contents of the budget.

Conservative leader Bennett agreed with him, adding the provision in the law was inserted on the recommendations of the Liberals in the last parliament.

FAIR PLAY FOR SCOTSMEN

OTTAWA, May 26—Abraham Albert Heaps, an English-born Jew appealed in the House of Commons today for fair play for Scotsmen. He said representations had been made to him by Scottish-Canadians that they had to pay a relatively high duty for kilts imported from the land of their ancestors and he thought it was most unfair.

Finance Minister Dunning said his recent budget did not touch the woolen items under which kilts were imported but he suggested Mr. Heaps, C. C. F. member for Winnipeg North, should make representations to members of his own race in Canada who were prominent in the clothing industry. It might be possible for Canadian-made kilts to be produced at a lower price and everyone satisfied.

TEXTILE ITEMS PASSED

OTTAWA, May 26—Proceedings of the House of Commons always are unpredictable and sometimes almost inexplicable. This fact was never demonstrated more forcibly than today.

One of the important sections of the budget deals with the textile schedules, reducing duties all along the line. It was expected the changes would be debated and, from some quarters of the House, attacked.

Finance Minister Dunning came into the House today armed with all sorts of Tariff Board reports and other data bearing on textile tariffs. But he didn't have to use any of it then. The textile items, regarded as a real stumbling block to steady progress, went through without debate and as fast as the chairman could read them.

FAIR PLAY FOR SCOTSMEN

OTTAWA, May 26—The Dominion Water Power and Hydro-metric Bureau of the Department of the Interior reports that run-off in the Maritime Provinces was below average during April because of spring break-up having occurred early this year, most of the winter's accumulation of snow had already melted during March.

In southern New Brunswick run-off based upon the records of the Lepreau river was about one-half of the normal for April. In southwestern Nova Scotia the records of Lahave river indicate run-off 37 per cent below the average while records of St. Mary river show that April run-off in the eastern portion of the province was 43 per cent below normal.

Second of his instructive talks on "Nutrition and Health". He discussed the minerals, Nitrogen, Iron, Iodine, Magnesium, Manganese and Sulphur as found in the human body, and the foods in which these are the most abundant, stressing the importance of milk in the human diet.

Mrs. Frank Muttart then put on a very interesting contest. A delicious lunch was then served by the hostess, assisted by Mrs. Stan Linkletter, Mrs. Norman McWilliams and Mrs. Harry Doull.

Canadians Should Boost Their C.N.R.

OTTAWA, May 26—(C.P.)—Canadians were urged tonight by John W. Dafoe, president of the Winnipeg Free Press, to take "a livelier and more direct interest" in the country's publicly-owned Canadian National railway.

"I know of no insurrection in Canada that more needs sympathy and support than the Canadian National Railway," Mr. Dafoe told the Canadian Political Science Association's annual meeting here.

"If they, by express their will and purposes, should accept openly a responsibility for their own property, the Canadian National would not be what it is today—a forlorn and helpless public institution which anyone, big or little, can maltreat and kick about, with no risk of reprisal."

Mr. Dafoe, in a paper on "Public Utilities and Administrative Boards, said where there was an obvious monopoly, only possible with the consent of the state, the case for the monopoly being public in character was being accepted by an ever-growing proportion of the public. Within this classification of monopolies "that by their nature should and in the fullness of time will be public" were fixed transportation, hydro-electric power, telephones, telegraphs and radio.

What stood in the way, however, of a more rapid development of government ownership and control of community facilities, monopolistic in their nature, was, he said, the fact that the demonstrable theory the service could be made profitable to the state often broke down when put to the test.

The Winnipeg newspaperman reviewed the history of the Canadian National, since the 1916 report of Sir Henry Drayton and W. M. Acworth recommended the government take over certain derelict roads and combine them with the government roads. Three different parliaments in a period of 15 years declared for corporate management of the road by a Board of Directors or alternatively a board of trustees appointed by the government and against the suggestion these boards should be self-perpetuating or they should be created at the instance of a specially constituted nominating board.

Comparing the Canadian National with prominent British experiments in the control of public utilities—all of them monopolies—Mr. Dafoe said the Canadian National was not a state monopoly.

No more EARLY MORNING Grouches!

"Thanks to Eno's 'Fruit Salt' for dispelling morning grouches and blues from our home. A glass of Eno first thing every morning was just what my husband and I needed to give us some pep and sparkle instead of half-wake irritability caused by a sluggish and lazy digestive system. Eno is now an established member of our household."

Mrs. W. D. P. (Saskatoon, Sask.) Letter No. 1248

Overcame Indigestion!

"I suffered years with indigestion. I took all kinds of medicines but had no relief so I gave up, until one day I bought a bottle of Eno, and before the bottle was half done I felt like a new man. So now I can eat anything and sleep like a baby. Getting up in the mornings I am full of pep."

Mr. A. V. D. (Bowmanville, Ont.) Letter No. 1211

ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" First Thing Every Morning

A management set-up that would give maximum efficiency and commend the railway increasingly to the regard of the Canadian people was therefore to be desired.

At the Provincial Sanatorium, May 18, 1936, Florence Anderson, age 18 years, daughter of the late Archibald and Mrs. Anderson, of Inverman.

The funeral was held from the home of her aunt, Mrs. Melville Molyneux. Interment was at St. John's Cemetery, Crapaud.
