This Year's Rookies Look Promising

By RALPH RODEN

NEW YORK, May 7 — (AP) — The early line on the major league rookie crop for the first few weeks of the 1950 season is encouraging. Sam Jethroe, Boston Braves' Negro outfielder and the most publicized pre-season rookie of the National League, is going great guns.

Brooklyn Dodgers believe they have come up with one of the finest third-base prospects in years in Bobby Morgan, a shortstop who also played for Montreal last year. Morgan has come through with a number of timely hits.

On the other hand, Luke Easter of Cleveland Indians, the American League's winter-book favorite for rookie of the year honors, is having trouble. Easter, expected to supply needed Indian batting punch, is hitting in the lower .200 bracket but his followers believe it won't be long before Big Luke asserts himself.

Newcastle Disease

OTTAWA, Delete — Vigorous action by veterinarians of the Canada Department of Agriculture in the slaughter of all infected birds as well as of those known or suspected to have been exposed to infection, is rapidly bringing under control the outbreak of Newcastle Disease among the poultry flocks in the Fraser Valley of B.C. The incidence appears to have diminished from a peak reached on April 12, Dr. Thomas Childs, Veterinary Director General, said recently.

The Canadian Government, said Dr. Childs, had adhered to its accepted policy of slaughter of infected and exposed animals and compensation therefor, as opposed to a suggested program using vaccine. It was actually far more economical in the long run, he explained, to stamp out the disease completely rather than adopt a vaccination policy which would commit the poultry industry to perpetual use of this control medium.

The present policy, he pointed out, had been eminently successful in complete eradication from Canada of dourine, rabies, glanders, and hog cholera and was rapidly doing the same with avian tuberculosis. "Newcastle Disease," Dr. Childs explained, is a serious virus disease affecting the nervous and respiratory systems of birds. It is highly contagious and may result in heavy mortality or seriously impaired egg production such as eggs without shells and so forth.

The disease is prevalent in the United States and may be carried by wild birds, and through infected poultry and egg crates, or through introduction of new breeding stock from infected sources. A few outbreaks in Eastern and Western Canada have been stamped out in the past.

The use of vaccine, Dr. Childs further explained, would seriously interfere with laboratory diagnostic work in that a vaccinated bird would exhibit approximately the same blood reactions to laboratory tests as a bird actually carrying the disease. It is conceded, he said, that properly prepared vaccine may have some value as a protective agent. However, use of vaccine would not be compatible with present policy.

The present outbreak in B.C., he declared, while considered serious enough to warrant radical control measures, has by no means reached alarming proportions and involves less than one and one half per cent of the poultry population of the Fraser Valley.

IT PAYS TO CLEAN AND TREAT YOUR SEED GRAIN OTTAWA, May 7 1950 — Year in and year out officials of the Canada Department of Agriculture have stressed the importance of using graded clean seed, properly treated to control disease.

A somewhat newer note in this regular warning was sounded recently by J. E. Langille of the Experimental Farm at Napan, N. S. He states that "while many of the cereal varieties possess resistance to some forms of smut this does not mean that seed treatment should be neglected."

Here again are the 'musts' when it comes to handling and choosing your cereal seed: Choose clean graded sound seed -- Use organic mercury compounds to kill the disease organisms of the various types of smut -- Treat the seed just before seeding unless cool dry storage is available.

See End Of Communist Party In West Germany

By George Boulwood

BONN, Germany, May 5 — (AP) — Anti-Communist feeling surged across West Germany today as the stunned populace realized the full import of Russia's announcement that all German war prisoners have been returned.

Chancellor Konrad Adenauer bitterly charged that 1,500,000 Germans — including "tens of thousands of deported civilians" — still are missing in the Soviet Union. He demanded, in the name of humanity, that the Kremlin account for their fate. The Chancellor made a special appearance before the West German Parliament.

The United States High Commissioner, John J. McCloy, said at his Frankfurt headquarters that Russia has failed to account for "many hundreds of thousands of German prisoners of war."

"I think the world should know what happened to them and to the many thousands of German civilians who also disappeared into the Soviet Union," McCloy said.

U. S. officials in Frankfurt said McCloy and Dean Acheson, U. S. Secretary of State, will discuss the German war prisoner situation when they meet in Paris Sunday.

Washington labelled Russia's announcement "fantastic and absurd." They estimated the Soviets are still holding "at least" 200,000 German troops in forced labor and prisoner of war camps.

The announcement by Tass news agency said the last group of war prisoners—17,538 of them—had been returned to Germany. Adenauer used Soviet figures to support his declaration that 1,500,000 are missing.

The Chancellor said that in 1945 Tass reported 3,500,000 Germans held in Russia. The Tass announcement said 1,939,063 had been repatriated. He said that still leaves more than 1,500,000 unaccounted for.

The announcement brought forecasts from West German leaders that the Russians had spelled the end of the Communist Party in Germany.

Socialist leader Kurt Schumacher predicted a move to ban the Communist Party. His cry was picked up by Adenauer's own Christian Democrats and by the Liberal Democrats, the second ranking party.

Franz Bleucher, right wing vice chancellor, said "those few Germans who so far have been deceived by Communism surely now at long last see the truth."

NEWINGTON, Ont., May 5 — (CP)—Ominous threats of vengeance chanted around a blazing 25-foot cross have ruffled the calm of this usually-placid Eastern Ontario village.

Three times in the last month Newington, a village of 300, has been invaded at night by a band of 40 to 50 vigilantes, determined to discourage a young woman's affection for a married man from a nearby community.

400 people 10 miles north of here They claimed the demonstrations fulfilled their purpose. Residents of this village are divided on how serious they believe the demonstrations are.

A. W. Loverin, town councillor, thinks it was "just a prank." It's all over now, he said, "and I believe the pair concerned learned a lesson. All that was being done was to scare the people."

He said "all we want to do is forget about it; after all, it was only a small cross." One Newington man said members of the organization, who come from many parts of Stormont County, hold regular meetings to map out their strategy. He said they made no attempt to hide their identity.

A witness to the most recent demonstration said he saw men marching around the burning cross chanting warnings about justice being done. "At intervals one or more of the men broke ranks to hurl some kind of fluid at the burning cross. The lady who lives in the house came out and screamed at the men. They continued their orderly march around the cross and a little while later they dispersed."

Fiery-Cross Burnings Alarm Town In Ontario

Latest episode in the cross-burning was Wednesday night when a blazing cross pierced the darkness and revealed the forms of a group of men chanting threats of what would happen to the woman if she continued to see the married man.

This isn't the first time the band of men, who describe themselves as members of the Ku Klux Klan without hoods and cloaks, have used the fiery-cross method of putting a stop to what they believe are immoral actions.

Twice last fall they burned crosses in Avonmore, a village of

Pea Vines Good Livestock Feed

Pea-vine silage and hay made from the vines and empty pods of canning peas have become important livestock feeds in many parts of Canada. Up to 200,000 tons of the silage or its equivalent in hay become available for feed every year.

Recent experiments carried out at the Dominion Experimental Station, Lethbridge, Alta., provide useful information on the value of these feeds in comparison with other more common feeds and indicate how they may be preserved and fed to the best advantage.

In most areas in Canada where canning peas are grown, the green vines and pods are simply piled into circular stacks and left to ensile in the stack. If the stack is built carefully and quickly a good quality silage usually results.

But even so about one foot on the outside and about one and a half feet on the top usually decomposes very badly and is unfit for feed, thus making the percentage of spoilage in small stacks quite high. When a silo is available, this loss can be avoided.

Another way of dodging spoilage losses is by spreading the green vines back to the field to let them dry, then stacking or baling them like any other kind of hay. This method means a lot more work, there is always some loss through shattering in gathering up the dried material and there is also danger of spoilage if the vines are caught by heavy rains while drying in the field.

Canning peas are legumes and are relatively higher in protein, calcium carotene—when cured as a hay or silage—than are grass hays such as timothy. On a similar moisture basis, they have a chemical composition very like that of medium quality, first-cutting alfalfa hay.

Feeding experiments were conducted over a period of three years to determine the value of pea-vine silage and pea-vine hay as compared with medium-to-good quality first-cutting alfalfa hay as the sole roughage for fattening yearling steers. Grain was fed twice daily.

Results of these experiments indicate that both pea-vine hay and pea-vine silage were slightly superior to alfalfa hay as a feed for fattening yearling steers. Similar experiments with fattening lambs produced similar results.

Experiments in the United States show that growing dairy stock on milking cows will thrive on pea-vine hay and pea-vine silage as well, but pea-vine silage—like most other silages—should not comprise more than one-half of the (dry) roughage allowance and should be fed as soon after milking as possible if off-flavors in the milk are to be avoided.

United States Pilgrims Set a Record In Rome Holy Year Estimates Run From 15,000 to 300,000 American Visitors

By NEA Foreign Service ROME, Italy—(NEA)—Rome is already alive with pilgrims, here to observe Roman Catholicism's 25th Holy Year. The celebration is held once every 25 years, and is expected to attract 2,000,000 visitors from every part of the world.

What each of the pilgrims must do is visit the four great churches of Rome. First, he goes to St. Peter's, where he crosses the threshold of the Holy Door, walled up by a slab of white marble between Holy Years. This act symbolizes that the pilgrim has stepped into a new, cleaner life.

Most pilgrims go, in order, from St. Peter's to St. Paul's-Outside-the-Wall to St. John Lateran and finally to St. Mary Major. In each of these four basilicas the pilgrim must say three Our Fathers, three Hail Marys, and repeat three times the prayer, "Glory be to the Father, to the Son and to the Holy Ghost. As it was in the beginning, is now and ever shall be, world without end. Amen."

Americans are more numerous in Rome this Holy Year than they were in 1925, the last Holy Year. In December, 1924, when the Holy Door was opened to symbolize the beginning of the Holy Year of 1925, there was not a single American present at the observance. Last December, however, when the Holy Year of 1950 was officially inaugurated, 166 Americans were witnesses.

Similarly, Americans, particularly women, are flocking to the city. They range in age from children to women like Mrs. Katherine Sheridan, an 80-year-old grandmother from Pasadena, Calif. Mrs. Sheridan travelled to Italy on a slow freighter, making the voyage from California in 27 days.

The Catholic Travel League of the American Express Company, which is organizing pilgrimages, estimates that 15,000 Americans will visit Rome in '50. "That may sound small," says David Lee of the League, referring to other estimates that have ranged as high as 300,000, "but bear in mind that that would still be the all-time high as far as American pilgrims are concerned."

Another big travel agency, Thomas Cook & Son, places the figure at 50,000, and adds that the only thing that will hold the number down is lack of space. Practically all existing ship space on boats to Europe this summer, says a Cook spokesman, is booked up. And space is getting increasingly tight, already, for boats scheduled to sail in the fall.

Besides ship travel, hundreds of pilgrims are coming to Europe by plane. One airline, Air France, has inaugurated special flights which permit pilgrims to stop over in France, where they can see France's religious shrines, on their way to Rome. Air France also will begin special thrice-weekly flights from Paris to Lourdes on April 6.

Hotel reservations in Rome, naturally, are at a premium. Authorities are erecting hostels—tent cities—in outlying sections, but the probability is that few Americans will want such rugged accommodations. A central committee, controlling hotel space, has been careful to keep price increases at a minimum, guarding against gouging of desperate pilgrims. At a medium-priced hotel, a visitor can obtain food and lodging for 2600 lire ($450) a day. But, at some of Rome's exclusive hotels, prices range as high as $15 to $20 a day, with the service typically continental and luxurious.
