42 Montreal Hunters Charged

MONTREAL. (CP) —Forty-two hunters—among them physicians, business men and two women—were arraigned Tuesday on charges resulting from seizure of 600 partridges, shot during the fall season and stored in refrigeration lockers.

Most of the hunters pleaded guilty to various charges and were fined a total of $1,230, ranging from $30 to $25. Judge C. E. Guerin ordered the birds turned over to Montreal hospitals.

The birds were seized in a raid on an establishment in suburban Westmount, by officers acting under the provincial fish and game department.

The real name of the 19th century novelist "George Elliot" was Marian Evans, daughter of Robert Evans.

THE GOOD SHEPHERD

Most of the images and figures used in the Bible to illuminate the great truths of religion are drawn from the simple agricultural life of the ancient east. The sower sowing his seed, the wheatfield spoiled by tares, the vine yielding its fruit, come at once to mind. Though some of these illustrations will retain their force as long as man lives by the fruit of the earth, they strike the twentieth-century townsman as somewhat remote from his world, and they may tend rather to form a barrier between him and his religious aspirations than to provide a means whereby they can be realized.

The difficulty may seem less acute if it is remembered that even when these illustrations were first used their appeal must often have rested not only on the familiarity of the scenes depicted (Jesus in his Galilean ministry could, of course, count on this), but also on the traditional significance which had attached itself to certain of the figures since remote Old Testament times.

Ever since the time of the psalmists and prophets the idea of comparing God to a shepherd has been common. The Lord is my shepherd," said the author of the twenty-third Psalm, and this thought is frequently echoed in the Old Testament. The prophets had expressed their hopes of a mighty intervention of God on behalf of his people in terms of the raising up of a faithful shepherd. Ezekiel, in particular, brought to his hearers a vivid attack on their contemporary rulers by saying that their shepherds "fed themselves," and not the flock; as a consequence the sheep had been scattered, had gone unfed, and had become a prey to every beast of the field. In addition to this condemnation, the prophet held out the promise that God himself would take over the shepherding of his own flock. "I, even I, will both search my sheep, and seek them out. As a shepherd seeketh out his flock in the day that he is among his sheep that are scattered, so will I seek out my sheep." It is against this background that the use of the shepherd-image in the New Testament must be understood. In the gospel, Christ makes the classical claim, "I am the good shepherd" and goes on to characterize the good shepherd as one who "gives his life for the sheep." His credentials are his sufferings undertaken on behalf of all those who were ready to join his flock. The epistle likens the pre-Christian life of its readers to that of "sheep going astray." They are now returned "unto the shepherd of their souls," whose example of sacrificial service is held before them as the model for their own. Both aspects of the work of Christ, his sacrifice for men and his example to his followers, are clearly recalled in the collect.

It is possible to translate such traditional figurative language into cold, rational prose. It is doubtful whether this effort is fruitful. All religious language is figurative for the simple reason that it deals with realities outside the range of everyday activity. It is better for modern Christians to make the effort to become familiar with the time-honoured phraseology of their religion. It can speak to them at levels of personality which lie deeper than the superficial rationality of the common day.
