Dorothy Dix's Letter Box

Often it is Better to Put up With an Unfaithful Husband — But if You do, Never Make a Martyr of Yourself for so Doing

Dear Miss Dix—My husband is an average man. He is kind, generous, considerate, easy to live with, with no more faults than the next man and also just as many.

Some are so crushed by discovering that the husbands that they thought, little tin gods have betrayed them that they can only lie down to her self-respect to rush to the divorce court and separate herself from a husband if he has not been true to her, no matter what subject poverty and want it may bring upon her and her children.

Many feel that they must shut their eyes to their husbands' philandering in order to keep a home together for their children.

Each wife must decide the question according to her own lights, of course. The heartbroken woman would drown in her own tears if she stayed with the husband she had loved and lost.

And, of course, as the worldly wise old woman said: "Romance goes with youth; all husbands are alike after you have been married to one for ten years; but there is always the established woman who gets a divorce from her philandering husband loses this consolation prize.

Dear Miss Dix—I am a young college graduate teaching in a large school. I like my work and would enjoy continuing it, but as usual I have fallen in love with a fine young man.

And, of course, as the worldly wise old woman said: "Romance goes with youth; all husbands are alike after you have been married to one for ten years; but there is always the established woman who gets a divorce from her philandering husband loses this consolation prize.
