Canadian Transport Aircraft May Be Manufactured In U.S.

By HAROLD MORRISON

WASHINGTON (CP) — U.S. Army Secretary Cyrus Vance says the Caribou II transport plane, being developed in Canada, may be manufactured in the United States.

He gave that response in a closed-door hearing before the Senate armed services committee where members criticized the U.S. plane order in Canada and suggested a similar plane could be manufactured in the U.S., providing more employment for Americans. A censored transcript of the Feb. 28 hearing was made public Thursday.

Senator Howard Cannon, Nevada Democrat, said he has heard Defence Secretary McNamara say there is little the Caribou can do that similar American planes cannot do.

Senator Stuart Symington, Missouri Democrat, said it seems Canadians sometimes seek "unfair advantages." While the U.S. is worrying about unemployment, Canada sells hundreds of millions of dollars worth of wheat to Communist China, he said.

SEEMS UNFORTUNATE

"If we are losing business because a foreign country finances the competition as a government operation, in part, that would seem to be an unfortunate development," he said.

Vance said the Caribou I, produced by de Havilland Aircraft of Canada Limited at Downsview, Ont., had advantages with its short takeoff and landing characteristics.

The U.S. Army has been buying the Caribou I steadily and how has joined with the company and the Canadian government in sharing costs of developing the bigger and more powerful Caribou II.

"However, we have the rights, pursuant to the contract, to manufacture this airplane in the United States if the research and development turn out all right," he added.

Caribous are used for transporting troops and equipment over rough terrain.

High Import, Export Level Urged By Importers' Head

By FORBES RHUDE
Canadian Press Business Editor

TORONTO (CP)—High levels in both imports and exports should be the Canadian trade aim, A. T. Brodeau, president of the Canadian Importers Association, said Thursday at the association's annual meeting.

"Let us not try to achieve equality by dragging everything down to a certain level," Mr. Brodeur stated, "but rather let us build up to a higher level to achieve equality or balance.

"Increase our imports, and increase our exports by a greater amount to create a trading balance or surplus."

Referring to Ontario's current trade crusade and what he described as its "objectionable advertising gimmicks," Mr. Brodeur cited the claim that "every $100 less of imports per capita creates one job," and added:

"Conversely, that would intimate that every $100 more per capita of imports robs one man of his job. How ludicrous and over-simplified a solution to a problem as complicated and diverse as international trade."

Mr. Brodeur, who is president of Cassidy's Ltd., Montreal, stated that if a policy of reducing or restricting imports were carried to its ultimate conclusion, it would cause rising costs for Canadian-made goods, reduce their export competitiveness, cause customers abroad to curtail purchases in Canada, and create havoc in various other ways.

POLICY MUST BE POSITIVE

M. E. Corlett, the association's legal counsel, said that because of events occurring elsewhere, "the Canadian government, however it will be composed after April 8, must embark upon a more imaginative and positive trade policy than has existed in recent years.

"Far-reaching tariff negotiations under the auspices of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade will be commenced within the next year. I would think that at such bargaining sessions the government should support any efforts of the United States under their new Tr de Expansion Act to secure lower common external tariffs by the European Economic Community.

"Canada herself should be willing to make substantial tariff concessions in negotiations with the U.S. in return for worthwhile tariff reductions by the U.S. which would be useful to Canadian exporters."

T. P. Gregor, president of Roneo of Canada, speaking on Anglo - Canadian trade, suggested that importers look more closely at what they import from other countries and examine the possibility of importing those goods from the United Kingdom.

"A great many more products could be 'made in England' instead of countries with which our balance of trade is less favorable."

Opening lead—ten of clubs.

Here is a fine hand that illustrates the technique of good dummy play. It was played in the national Masters Individual many years ago.

West led the ten of clubs. Declarer covered with the jack and won the king with the ace. Then he played the jack of spades. If West had taken the ace, South's task would have been easier but West properly ducked and the jack held the trick.

From South's viewpoint, nine tricks were still far, far away. He was short of entries to dummy and there weren't many tricks to develop even if he got there. At this point he led the jack of hearts, being careful to play the eight from dummy when West took the king.

West returned the nine of clubs, which South took with the queen. Declarer then cashed the ace of hearts, playing the nine from dummy, and exited with a club.

East took the seven with the eight and returned the seven of diamonds, covered by South with the nine. When West played the ten, South allowed him to hold the trick.

This effectively endplayed West. He could not play the ace and another spade, which would make dummy's spades good, nor could he lead the ten of spades first, because dummy would win and return a spade to accomplish the same result. So West returned the jack of diamonds.

Declarer won it with the queen, cashed the six of clubs, and led a diamond to the ace. He now played the three of hearts and finessed the seven when East followed low. The queen of hearts provided trick number nine.

Note that if the eight and nine of hearts had not been unblocked earlier, South would have gone down because he would have been unable to cash two hearts at the finish.

Note also that if East had returned a club at trick seven, instead of a diamond, South would have attained the same end position by leading the nine of diamonds.
