By "frills" we don't mean music and art, which do not take up much time, and are worth all the time spent on them, but history, geography and other side issues which might well be postponed until later. If a child has a good command of his native tongue, he can travel twice as fast in the later grades, and make up for any lost time in the social studies. Heaven help the children if the situation is further complicated by introducing foreign languages in an early grade, as has been suggested.
