Murder Could Not Kill

INSTALMENT 10.

But Robin did not see Inspector West. On inquiring for that official he was informed that he was out. He realized that this was something he had subconsciously almost hoped for, and experienced a sense of relief on receiving the information. He found himself assuring the sergeant at the inquiry desk that it did not matter; his business was not important; he could see the inspector on some other occasion.

Outside on the street again, he examined his reasons for his change of front. At the last moment he had suddenly realized, with something akin to horror, that in the course of an interview with Inspector West it was almost inevitable that Laurette Dexter must be incriminated in connection with Brett's mysterious disappearance. West would have been practically certain to ask Robin what had taken him to see Lessing; what had led to the quarrel which had resulted in his perturbed feeling that actually he had deliberately lied to him, it was doubtful if he could possibly have escaped full confession. The least he could do was to let her know of his realization of the significance of the whole affair.

He hailed a passing taxi. When he reached Portchester Crescent, as he was paying off the driver he heard the door behind him open, and turned to see Laurette in street clothes giving a final pull to her gloves as she stepped out and the door was closed behind her.

"Oh, hello!" she called down to him—there was no mistaking this delight in her voice. "I've got to confess I had just about given you up."

"I didn't think you had any intention of going out," he rejoined, too serious to respond to her banter. He was slightly astonished at her good spirits.

"Nor had I, but the Sister Anne act rather gets on one's nerves after a little while. I waited and waited, but not hearing from you—however, here you are; and what shall we do? Like to come back in and have tea and talk there, or how would it be if we took a walk through the Park?"

Ordinarily the invitation would have set Robin's heart beating faster, but in his present unsettled state it was all he could do to murmur polite acceptance.

"I'm afraid," he began at last, "I have no good news to report."

"I guessed as much," she commented quietly.

"I saw our man all right; I thought I was on what hunting people call a breast-high scent, and saw a kill ahead, but—and as he spoke his voice assumed its natural bright and cheerful tone—"I ran slap into a dead end. A complete fade-out. Web-fingers can't help us."

"Nothing whatever. I'm frightfully sorry, Laurette, but there it is. I'm afraid you're on a hopeless quest."

"I am, eh? I wonder! I notice you don't say we are—Robin."

It was the first time she had deliberately addressed him by his Christian name. He flushed.

"Where had you intended going just now?"

"Charles Street," she replied.

"Charles Street?" he repeated. "To see Peter Lessing?"

"Certainly; who else? May I not go to see my fiancé? Surely you have no objection?"

"It?" he said quickly. "Why—why on earth should I have?"

"Please don't ask me. I was judging by your expression. Your face certainly seems to express disapproval." As he remained silent she proceeded in gentler tones: "Actually it was you, Robin, who put the idea into my head. Waiting for you, I began to wonder if I hadn't been wrong in deciding not to confide in Peter. I'm being very frank with you Robin. I may seem to have an easy conscience, but really I'm dead scared over what I've done and what I haven't done. I'm frightened, and that's saying something, Robin. It's a new sensation for me, and I don't like it one little bit. It came back to me that you had been staggered when I told you I'd said nothing about Brett to my fiancé, and somehow, when I began to turn it around in my mind, something made me realize I was perhaps being unfair to him. You were generous enough to take me on trust; surely he will, too."

Robin's eyes narrowed.

"I see. You mean you're going to tell Lessing what you told me?"

"Yes. When my mind's once made up I'm all for swift action and nothing will stop me."

"You mean to tell him that and nothing more?"

"I can't tell him more—nor is it necessary; not yet. I hope to tell you both before long."

"That may not be necessary—I mean, to tell us both. It's only fair to let you know, Laurette, that I went myself to see Mr. Lessing a little while ago."

She stopped walking.

"You did? About what?"

"About my own personal affairs. I quite naturally wanted to know why he was having my movements followed."

"Yes. Well, go on; what happened?"

"Well, he—he more or less ordered me out of the house. Looking back on it I'm not sure that I blame him. I'm apt to be precipitate. However, if I may use the expression, I gave nothing at all away about you, if that's why you look so upset—but, in any case, that wouldn't have mattered since you're going to tell him all about it yourself."

"You do agree that I should tell him then?" she asked, a glint of anger in her eyes.

"By all means! I don't pretend to control the situation." He could not keep a note of sarcasm out of his voice. "And I fancy it should produce some interesting developments."

To be continued.

WOODSTOCK, N.S., April 14—(CP)—John Hamilton, 33, of Coldstream, near Woodstock, died in hospital today a few hours after he was crushed by a falling tree. It glanced off another tree and Hamilton, in trying to avoid it, tripped over a stump. He fell to the ground and the tree crashed down upon him.

TIGERS AT BAY

He also told of two boys, 11 and 13 years of age, who had been sent to market with a load of kaffir. Just as they were on the point of pitching camp for the night, a tiger and his mate sauntered out of the woods towards them.

One of the boys spent the night in prayer while the other shone a flashlight into the beasts' eyes. The animals slunk away at dawn.

On another occasion, said Mr. Dyck, a farmer and his wife were attacked by native Indians on their homestead. They regained consciousness and made their way to a hospital for treatment.

Mr. Dyck said establishment of a spinning and weaving industry would provide a greatly-needed cash income for the Mennonites. Paraguay imports all her textiles and Mr. Dyck said an attempt now is being made to obtain the necessary machinery for the project.

TORONTO (CP)—More than 3,000 Indians in Patricia district of northern Ontario now hold registered trapline licenses, the department of lands and forests reported. Fur-bearing animals are "generally in satisfactory numbers" although lynx, fisher and marten were scarce.

Whim Road and Vicinity

Mr. Calvin MacKinnon has arrived from Northern Ontario to spend some time at Whim Road.

Mr. Stillman MacKinnon has returned to his home at Whim Road after being employed in Northern Ontario for the winter months.

Mr. and Mrs. Russell Downie and daughter were week-end visitors from the parents, Mr. and Mrs. Dan Stewart, Kilmuir.

Mr. Sydney MacGowan, student at F. W. C., is spending the Easter holidays with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Murdoch MacGowan, Kilmuir.

Mr. and Mrs. Bob Campbell, Whim Road, recently attended a miscellaneous shower held in their honor at the home of Mrs. Campbell's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Alex MacPherson, Bellview.

Mr. and Mrs. Cecil Campbell, Whim Road, were recent visitors to Charlottetown. They were accompanied by their daughter, Mrs. Rueben Watts who has been spending her holidays here and is now returning to work.

Mr. Cecil Campbell was hostess to members of the Whim Road W. M. S. when they held their meeting at her home on Friday night, March 10th. The meeting was conducted by the President, Mrs. Cecil Campbell, and in the absence of the Secretary, Mrs. Wm. Fraser, the business procedure was taken care of by Mrs. Garnet Moore. One notable visitor present was Miss Ida Cecil Moore, authoress of "The Lucky Orphan", a children's book that was recently published. Mrs. J. N. MacDonald kindly invited the members to her home for their next meeting. At the close of the evening, dainty refreshments were served by the hostess.

Locusts, Parrots Harry Mennonites in South America

WINKLER, Man., April 16—(CP)—Tigers, swarms of locusts, crop-eating parrots, long treks through rough country to reach market—those are some of the "problems" faced by Mennonites now living in Paraguay.

Mr. C. J. Dyck, who returned to his Canadian homeland recently after five years' service with the Mennonite Central Committee in Paraguay, told audiences here that the Mennonite settlers are "learning to cope with their problems and will make better progress from now on."

Mr. Dyck said the rail line ends about 68 miles from the community where the Mennonites are settled. It takes 14 to 16 days to travel the distance by ox-team. However, extension of the railway for about half the distance to the community is expected to be started shortly.

The Paraguayan government provided the settlers, many of whom came from Canada, with 100 tons of poison to battle locusts and other pests such as the cotton-leaf worm and giant ants. Mr. Dyck said that ripe kaffir (corn) growing near woodlands is often ruined by flocks of parrots.

WOULD DEVELOP ISLANDS

SANT JOHN, N. B. (CP)—City solicitor Henry D. Hopkins has been asked to find out just who owns and controls the islands in the Saint John River near the famous Reversing Falls. A private citizen told city council he wants to develop the islands as a tourist resort. The islands had been leased by the city from the federal government.

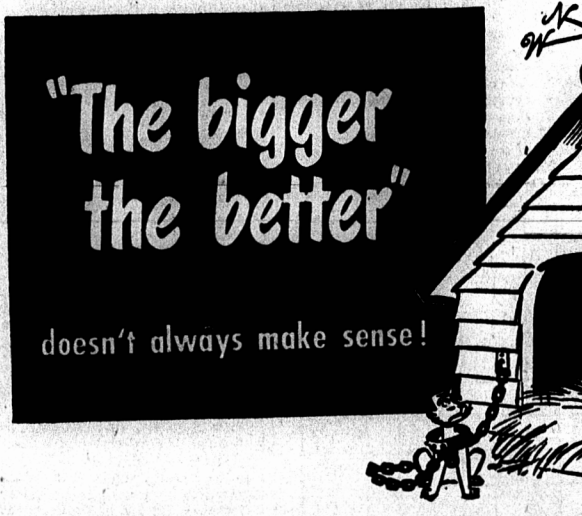

Happy Occasion at Montague

Mr. LeRoy White of Montague proudly handed out the cigars on a very happy occasion on Monday, March 27th when Mrs. White gave birth to Joanne 5 lbs. 11 ounces and Janice 5 lbs. 11 ounces in the King's County Memorial Hospital, marking the first time that twin girls, in the case where both survived, were born in this town. Families here have been doubly blessed before, but it was always two boys or a boy and girl combination. It is interesting to note that although the White twins have the distinction of being the first born here they are not the only ones who live here. Two of the community's older and most highly regarded citizens, Mrs. G. A. Thompson and Miss Martha Townshend are twins. They were born, however, at Rollo Bay, but spent the most of their lives at Montague. Congratulations are in order certainly for Mr. and Mrs. White pictured above with the twins and nurse Bessie Poole. Their beautiful home on the new road is bound to be still brighter when Joanne and Janice are grown enough to play ball with their two brothers, Ronald and Barry.

If Chest is Sore For Relief—Do This!

A vigorous rubbing of the chest, neck and side with Nerviline is often very advisable. This soothing liniment soaks into the area where the pain is seated, and gives fast relief to sore chest due to cold. When congestion is dissipated and painful breathing is relieved, the sense of soreness is rapidly relieved. Just try Nerviline for chest-tightness, coughs and soreness due to cold. It is a powerful liniment, and if used in time may save the whole family the discomforts of numerous minor ills. Try Nerviline for lame back, sore joints and rheumatic aches. Large bottles, 35c, at all dealers.
