

Hurricane Causes Heavy Property Damage In C.B.

SYDNEY (CP) — Hurricane Helene moved across Newfoundland Monday after smashing Cape Breton with one of the most damaging gales in the island's history.

Cape Breton's property damage is expected to reach hundreds of thousands of dollars. There were no injuries.

The island's only link with the Nova Scotia mainland during the gale's five-hour seige was a single telephone line.

A 115-foot RCMP cutter, the Fort Walsh, grounded on Scatarie Island on Cape Breton's east coast, but her 16 crew members managed to scramble to safety on the island.

Traffic in Sydney was immobilized as 90-mile-an-hour winds sent trees crashing across main streets, smashing store windows and bucking homes. One house was blown off its foundation.

Power was restored to parts of the city about noon after a blackout of several hours. The Cape Breton Post, which had announced it would not publish for lack of power, hit the streets at 1 p.m., five hours late. Some residents said the storm was more devastating than a 1927 hurricane with 100-mile winds.

COMMUNICATIONS CUT
Reports from Newfoundland were sketchy. Communications to Corner Brook and Port aux Basques on the southwest coast were severed. The capital city of St. John's was cut off from the Canadian mainland most of the day after the hurricane hit Nova Scotia communication links.

The Halifax weather office said Helene was over central Newfoundland at 5 p.m. A.D.T. still packed winds of 60 miles an hour with gusts to 90. Forecasters said Helene should pass Newfoundland Monday night on its way to the southern tip of Greenland.

About 55 Portuguese fishing trawlers and a handful of Spanish vessels were driven to shelter in St. John's harbor. The vessels were fishing off the Newfoundland and Greenland coasts.

At Sydney an unidentified freighter in harbor drifted four miles offshore and rode through the storm with its engines reversed to avoid grounding. A half-dozen pleasure craft went aground.

In the city's east end, a large frame warehouse of the L. E. Shaw brick plant crumpled after 20 employees scrambled out. There were no estimates of damage.

CLASSES CANCELLED
Many parts of Cape Breton were left without power. School classes were cancelled, but trains and buses maintained schedules. Two airline flights to Sydney were cancelled.

The gale struck the Nova Scotia coast during the night, lightly brushing the Annapolis Valley where the fall's apple crop is still on the trees.

In Halifax, 80-mile winds pounded a 44-foot sloop ashore, causing several thousand dollars damage. A smaller sailing craft was sunk.

Prince Edward Island's eastern shore was buffeted, but snapped power lines were quickly repaired. New Brunswick escaped damage.

Bomarc Missile Use Poses Reconnaissance Problems

By DAVE McINTOSH
Canadian Press Staff Writer
OTTAWA (CP) — Adoption of the Bomarc anti-aircraft missile into the Canadian air defence system will make the vital reconnaissance problem more difficult, officials said Monday.

The final decision on launching of "massive retaliation" by the United States Strategic Air Command might depend upon positive identification of unknown aircraft in the Canadian air defence system, they added. No missile could carry out such a role.

Even Boeing Airplane Company of Seattle, Wash., manufacturer of the Bomarc, says in a press release: "The unmanned military aircraft (the Bomarc) does not supplant the manned aircraft. No missile is yet capable of judgment, of reasoning."

The problem of identification was explained to the Commons estimates committee in July by Defence Minister Pearkes. He said: "The manned interceptor can be used in the identification role, whereas surface-to-air missiles cannot."

"Identification is one of the most difficult problems with which the air defence commander is faced."

Officials said they believe this is one reason the government has as yet reached no final decision on whether to order limited production of the supersonic Arrow interceptor.

They said final cancellation of the Arrow program would leave the RCAF with no method of reconnaissance over northern Canada unless the subsonic CF-100 jets were kept in service beyond 1961.

PENDING REPLACEMENT
Prime Minister Diefenbaker has said the CF-100s will continue in their present role "pending their replacement with Bomarc weapons or squadrons with later types of aircraft."

Meanwhile, RCAF officers expressed concern about the government's Bomarc announcement on morale of aircrew.

An air force spokesman said there will be a continuing need for pilots. Not only were the CF-100 squadrons reorganizing in operation but aircrew would still be needed for the 12-squadron air division in Europe and in maritime and transport commands.

Guide, Scout Groups "Grow Up" Says Leader

"The Girl Guide and Boy Scout movement is beginning to grow up", Mrs. W. Rankine Nesbitt, Chief Commissioner of the Canadian Guides Association said in an address before the Rotary Club at the weekly luncheon meeting held at the Charlottetown Hotel yesterday.

Mrs. Nesbitt was stressing the satisfactory growth of the Girl Guide organization during the years of its existence which will reach the half-century mark in 1960.

"We are trying to prepare girls for womanhood", Mrs. Nesbitt continued, as she described the onerous duties of the home and the raising of children. "Pre-school education, including spiritual, with an understanding of religion definitely enters into the activity of the mother in the home."

LASTING VALUES
"These young women are usually the first hostesses to — new Canadians and the impression they make can be of deep and lasting value in the life and future happiness and contentment of such citizens," Mrs. Nesbitt said.

Touching on the importance of education and the major part played by those engaged in that profession, Mrs. Nesbitt pointed out — the respect engendered, for those so engaged and the necessity of having a good education in order to meet modern requirements for reasonable success.

Camping is still the core and centre of the Guide's program, although the regulations in the Province differ under which camps may operate. Mrs. Nesbitt described some of the instructions in old camp literature which would not meet modern requirements.

Members of the World Association are found in 42 countries and in addition several countries have Girl Guide organizations which are doing splendid work but fall short of the recognized standard for complete affiliation. The status of women, climate, religion and language are the chief objects thwarting a closer relationship with the young girls of several countries.

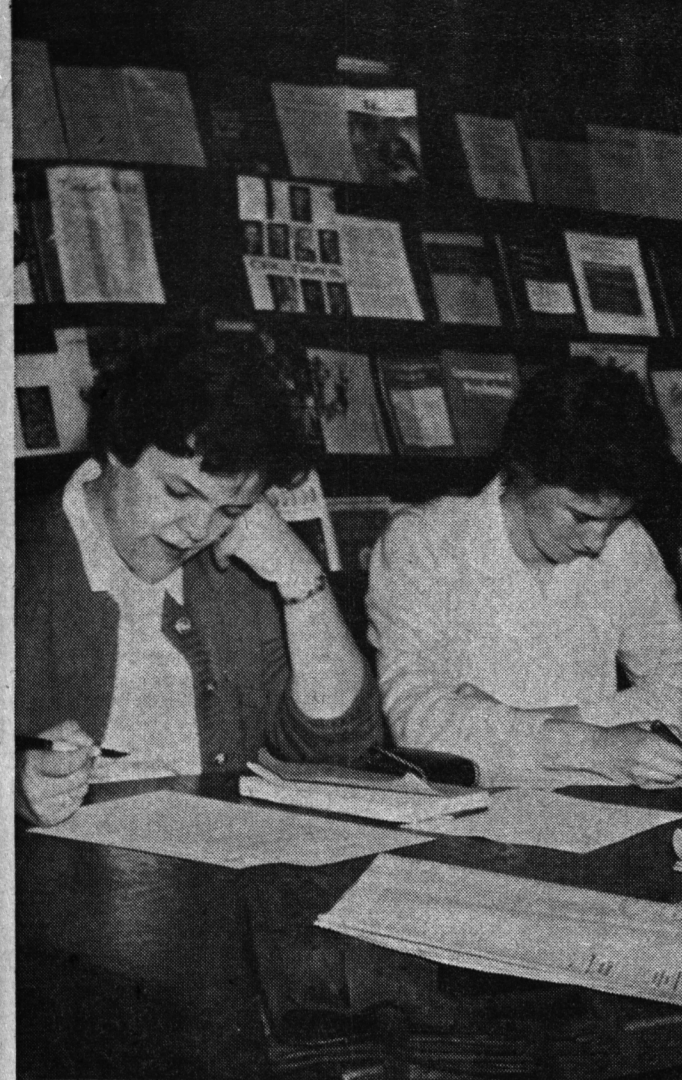

Mrs. Nesbitt cited the Latin-American temperament as experienced at the Brazil conference last year when South American delegates drifted in to meetings late, much to the annoyance of others. The contrary attitude was made clear when the question was raised — "Why all the hurry?"

Expressing warm thanks for the work done by the Rotary Club of Charlottetown in connection with the Summer Adventure Camp, Mrs. Nesbitt said it was a training project for college or working girls which brought a glowing account and words of appreciation from the young visitors.

THANKS SPEAKER

BRISTOL

Friends here were shocked last week to learn of the passing in Boston, Mass., of Mr. Herbert Douglas, a former resident of Bristol. Mr. Douglas operated the old Lea Coffin farm, in the Harbour district for some time before going to the States to take up carpenter work, and make his home there. His funeral was held from his old home at Savage Harbour, where his sister Ada, Mrs. Wilfred Coffin and Mr. Coffin reside. Burial was in the family plot at Mt. Stewart, beside his late father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Douglas.

Mrs. Harry H. Cox is visiting in Toronto at present, guest of her son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Herb H. Cox. She will also visit other relatives and
