Farmers And Their Wives Prepare For The Winter

Now the copper-hued oaks leaves fall, not wailed on a zephyr of late, laid tenderly away to earth as are the acorns, but snatched quite ruthlessly by the high winds that pass. "I notice some trees broken today," James confessed at supper. "I expected it. The winds have been strong."

"Was the crossing rough?" we inquired of our folk who returned yesterday from the Atlantic Fair, one by way of the trip good—but that was a former.

"A little," Mack said of the former. "Not so smooth as was the trip good—but that was a former."

"Nothing to notice—or bother one's father said or the latter. Both agreed it was good to see foot again on the farm that means home. The members of the herd too, that made the trip, seemed well content to come to the stable once more. Even though "A nice time was had by all of the members of the herd, and Elva and the one girl of this farm who had returned a day earlier, it was satisfying to get back to the familiar rural again. "It's school for me today," Mack commented, not untruthfully, this morning. "Is the best one to think of the home folks when he is abroad. Out of his allowance, an earned one, he brings souvenir gifts to them, amazingly few as open. Peter's eyes shone as he opened a colorful truck, his favor. "It's exactly what I've been wishing for!" he smiled.

"It's good," James repeated, "to have them all at home again." James' usual suggestion as to its highest? One of James' favorites, a dish of fish, he suggested for the actual nourishment it gives, but the fish comes to him; pictures of fish suppers by lamp light, with the glow from the low-burned soot reflecting a flickering light on a wall; with "hameley" foods; bread from the mill's flour, butter from the white-washed dairy, and the choice Scotch cake, made with a pat of the new unsalted butter, to come to the table. The fish comes to him; pictures of fish suppers by lamp light, with the glow from the low-burned soot reflecting a flickering light on a wall; with "hameley" foods; bread from the mill's flour, butter from the white-washed dairy, and the choice Scotch cake, made with a pat of the new unsalted butter, to come to the table.

Herring was our fare, taken earlier, it was satisfying to get yesterday from the smart truck of the Fishman, on his last call of the season. His parting, "Goodbye now! Hope to see you all in the spring"—left a moment of reflection—a kind of lonely feeling, like that we own to when toward the last of the hayting we see swallows perched in a silent row on a high wire above the yard, or when the Canada Goose, in a line, with a friend face away to the South. It foresees the summer. And that matter how beautiful in prospect the winter may appear, we know that storms and certain bleak days. Nevertheless the spring is there, over the span of months, far from the farm, and work towards it. Farmers round up their harvestings, the farm-ers, and the lawns border by its blooms.

—Until tomorrow — Diary — Good-night.

MARY HAWORTH

Woman Doubts Truth Of Sailor's Promises

Dear Mary Haworth: I believe CS's boy friend, the Norwegian, is a real one. I have weekly telephone visits. They are friends of 10 years and it is an awkward situation for me.

According to the Norwegian captain of a freighter on which I traveled 10 years ago, a seaman's college training consists of two years and then he graduates to third mate, not first mate, as this led to his being a woman's companion.

Also it takes quite a while to become captain of a ship. And these sailors and officers lead very lively lives, as their home-leave consists of six months a year every two years. For this reason, most of them marry Norwegian girls, because, to quote the Captain: "Newspaper women don't expect anything."

My information may be a bit outdated, but not enough to vitiate its relevance. I think respectfully, E.D.N.

Dear K.N.: Thanks for your preliminary message, which may wish to clip and send to her boy friend for interpretation.

Doubtless it is always proper to adults to sound a friendly word of warning, to put the brakes on until facts are searched, when teenage strangers meet by chance and fall in love. I am sure you will do this. However, in the above case, I am inclined to rate the boy as a reliable character. I tend to give him the benefit of doubt, as a contradiction exists between what he said, and (2) the traditional procedures governing a sailor's conduct on home leave.

I can imagine that the girl might not get the best of the telephone flattery. Write her, if possible, immediately, in trying to recall and transcribe precisely what the sailor has said, and let her know about his job history and prospects of advancement. It is easy to be deceived.

Indeed, lots of cherished wives would be hard-put-to-it to give you the facts of their background picture, regarding their husband's job situation, if they were not so sure of their hearsay, not direct experience, in their own right. —M.M.

Dear Mary Haworth: What do you think of a married man and another woman who have frequent phone talks while his wife's eyes are at work? he has money.
