United States Ar.d Canada Exemplify Good Will

By GEORGE KITCHEN
Canadian Press Staff Writer

WASHINGTON (CP) — Canada and the United States continued in 1957 to set an example of good neighborliness lor a world beset by the fears and prejudices of cold war politics.

Even the strains of the Norman case, which produced diplomatic sparks between Ottawa and Washington for a brief period last spring, failed to disturb the easy-going relationship between two nations often described as the best neighbors in the world.

The election last June of a Progressve Conservative government in Canada stirred sharp interest here, with some U.S. observers wondering if its pro British tendencies might hamper co - operation, but the months rolled by with little effect on diplomatic, cultural and commercial echanpes between the two.

The new government sent a cabinet committee here to discuss with the U.S. government Canada's worries over U.S. wheat disposal policies and its chairman, Finance Minister Donald Fleming, later told reporters Canada in the future would have "much less to complain about."

INTEREST DIFSFER

Canada's preoccupation with the towering deficit she suffered in her American trade drew little attention in the U.S., where interest was concentrated on the strength of the Canadian dollar, developments in industry and natural resources and the investment possibilities north of the border.

However, with what may be an awakening of congressional interest in Canada, the House foreign affairs committee in December sent one of its members, Congressman Frank Coffin of Maine, to Ottawa and Montreal to evaluate Canadian complaints about U.S. policies. Coffin will make another trip north early in the new year.

Defence co-operation continued at a high level with the signing of an agreement to pool operational command of Canadian and American air defences, with an American as chief and a Canadian, Air Marshal C.R. Slemon 53, of Ottawa, as his deputy. Details still are being worked out. Headquarters for the new integrated command are in Colorado Springs, Colo.

NORMAN IMPASSE

Relations between the two countries were placed under their greatest strain in years last March when a U.S. Senate investigating sub-committee sought to label Dr. E. Herbert Norman, Canadian ambassador to Egypt, as a Communist. Norman, who had been cleared by the Canadian government when the sub-committee aired the same charges in 1951, committed suicide two weeks later.

Canada fired off several diplomatic protests to Washington over proposals to raise tariffs, including one, still pending at the year-end, to increase the duty on imports of lead and zinc. The U.S., for its part, urged Canada to remove a tax imposed last January on the advertising revenues of Canadian editions of U. S. magazines.

John Diefenbaker, Canada's new prime minister, conferred briefly with President Eisenhower in October when he visited Washington with Queen Elizabeth during her royal visit. Diefenbaker would say later only that they discussed "matters of mutual interest."

Joint construction of the St. Lawrence seaway, scheduled to open in the spring of 1959, proceeded smoothly but the two countries were unable to reach agreement in several meetings on methods of using, to the best advantage of both countries, the waters of rivers which flow across the international boundary.

Appeals Court Gives Dallas Integration Breathing Spell

DALLAS, Tex. (AP)—A federal Appeals Court handed Dallas a breathing spell Friday by ruling that it need not integrate its public schools Jan. 27. This overruled a district court order setting that date.

Dallas was the next large city scheduled under federal court orders to mix white and Negro students in classes.

On the street corners, in restaurants, in neighborhood gatherings, and in back-fence chats, the big question had been:

"Will Dallas be another Little Rock?"

Dallas is an "Old South" city, and many of its residents follow Old South ways in Negro-white relationships. A wave of northerners swept into the city after the war, but the ratio remains strongly Southern in the city of $25,000 population.

At the same time, its citizens have shown signs of tolerance.

So no one could safely predict whether violence would have erupted had the schools been integrated at mid-term as ordered. Conversations indicated many feared it would.

The decision in September ordering mid - term integration came from federal Judge William H. Atwell 88, who said he ruled reluctantly. Twice before that he issued decisions saying Dallas need not integrate and was overruled each time.

DESERVE MORE TIME

The Appeals Court decision said Dallas school authorities "should be accorded a reasonable further opportunity to meet their primary responsibility (of integrating)."

Against the plea of the school board that it needs more time, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People has replied that the board has had two years in which to begin integration since the original suit was filed Feb. 5, 1955.

INVASION OF SNAILS

TOKYO (Reuters)—Japan Saturday braced itself to meet an invasion by an army of giant snails, already attacking islands throughout Southeast Asia. The Japanese agriculture ministry's blight prevention bureau warned rice farmers in South Japan that the slimy army is expected to hit Kyushu Island "in the near future."

U. S. Is Probing Newsprint Firms

WASHINGTON (AP)—The justice department disclosed Saturday that it is gathering information from newsprint companies in a check for possible antitrust violations. The material also will be used in a report to Congress.

A department spokesman said FBI agents are going to the offices of American companies that control Canadian newsprint firms or are affiliated with them.

A quarterly report to Congress on newsprint is required from the attorney general under the Defence Production Act.

The department spokesman said the investigators are not entering the offices of purely Canadian companies.

There were demands in Congress last spring for an antitrust investigation of the newsprint industry after Canadian manufacturers raised prices $4 a ton.

Demand More In Lieu Of Taxes

HALIFAX (CP) — Four Canadian cities have agreed to join Halifax in demanding more money in lieu of taxes from the National Harbors Board, Mayor Charles Vaughan said Saturday.

He said he asked Saint John, N.B., Quebec, Montreal, Trois-Rivieres, Chicoutimi and Vancouver city governments to unite with Halifax in the appeal and all but two agreed.

Trois-Rivieres and Chicoutimi had not replied yet.

The mayor said in 1954 the Harbors Board reported a net revenue of more than $5,700,000 over operating costs in the ports of Halifax, Saint John, Quebec, Montreal and Vancouver.

Payments in lieu of taxes in the same cities totalled only $400,000.

Mr. Vaughan said, "it is obvious the board is getting away with a free ride."

Radio Centre At Gander Airport s Renovated

OTTAWA (CP)—A radio communication centre at Gander, Nfld., has completed renovation at that transatlantic airport to make it more efficient, the transport department said Friday.

The department said the centre now is equipped to use more than 50 frequencies and is linked with airports at Shannon, Ireland; Birdlip, England; Reykjavik, Iceland, and Goose Bay, Labrador.

"Transmissions from the centre are broadcast from a new and powerful remote transmitter station that rates among the world's best of its type."

A new 40-kilowatt transmitter had been added to connect the Gander communications centre with Birdlip.

"Its tremendous power has made these communications operative 98.2 per cent of the time," the department said.

The centre operates 24 hours a day with eight operators on duty at a time.
