

Student-Scientists Give Hint Of Arctic Findings

By JANE BECKER
 Caadian Press Staff Writer
MONTREAL (CP) — Five student-scientists, their notebooks crammed with data gathered during a summer in Canada's barren Arctic, told Friday of some of the results of their expeditions.

The five were among members of 11 research teams who spent the summer in the Arctic under fellowships from the Arctic Institute of North America. They were located at points ranging from Alaska to Greenland.

The teams studied the geographical formation of mountain ranges in Labrador, studied tree growths in northern forests, investigated the habits of gulls in the central Arctic, and even measured such scientific detail as the oxygen intake of a species of Arctic salmon.

At a press conference Friday five students from McGill University's graduate school stressed that in the summer months the north is neither bleak nor particularly cold. The usual material comforts were not missed.

SWIMS NEAR UNGAVA
 Geoffrey Power, 23 year-old University of Durham graduate now studying northern salmon, found it warm enough most of the summer to swim in the George River, flowing into Ungava Bay. About 200 miles to the east, in a stretch of Labrador uninhabited even by Eskimo, Dr. and Mrs. J. D. Ives, both geographers, cooked with less trouble than in Montreal, "because you live so simply in the north." They said they didn't even miss a radio.

At Nettilling Lake, which straddles the Arctic Circle in Baffin Island, D. R. Oliver and J. A. Thompson, made a study of Arctic trout and lake fauna. They found they not only worked harder and felt better than in the south, but had each gained 20 pounds by summer's end.

Principal purpose of the studies is to further fundamental scientific research. But often they give a hint of the future economic or commercial possibilities of a region as well.

RIVER OVER-STOCKED
 Last summer Power studied salmon in another part of Ungava, and it was believed there might be sufficient stocks to support large-scale commercial fishing. The Hudson's Bay Co. had at one time had such a fishery, and recently an American company moved in with a permit from the Quebec government.

This year, Power caught a sampling of 400 salmon in a gill net and weighed and measured them to determine age and growth rate. He virtually quashed the theory that commercial fishing would be possible in the area.

"The river was so fully-stocked that many fish were half-starved," he said. "But it seems pretty well certain now that any large-scale commercial fishing would deplete stocks far faster than they could replace themselves."

This would be disastrous to Ungava Eskimo, as salmon was their only food supply for dogs.

Geographical exploration such as that carried out by Dr. and Mrs. Ives over a 400-square-mile area of the Torngat Mountains in Labrador will probably be increasingly frequent in the future, said Dr. Svend Orvig of the McGill geography department.

This year McGill completed its aerial topographical survey of Labrador region and their maps now are being published in Ottawa by the federal mines department.

Dulles Replies To Stevenson's Claims Re Peron Appeasement

WASHINGTON, (AP) — State Secretary Dulles, responding to statements by Democratic presidential nominee Adlai E. Stevenson, said Wednesday that President Eisenhower's brother Milton has played a highly constructive role in foreign affairs.

Dulles told his press conference he felt he could depart from his self-imposed rule against being drawn into political charges and counter charges during this campaign.

Stevenson said in a campaign speech at Miami Tuesday night that the Eisenhower administration had appeased ex-dictator Juan P. Peron of Argentina.

The Democratic candidate said a member of the president's personal family assumed a special, if informal, responsibility for our relationships with Argentina.

Stevenson aides said he meant Milton Eisenhower, who has made trips to Latin America as a special White House representative.

Dulles spoke with some heat as he said the president's brother had played a highly constructive role and had never interfered with normal policy matters at the state department.

Dulles said some of the proposals brought back by Milton Eisenhower, dealing with trade and aid for Latin America, had been adopted.

As far as the U.S. attitude toward Peron is concerned, Dulles said, Peron came into power under the Democratic administration in the U.S. and went out of power under Eisenhower's administration. Dulles made no claim, however, that Eisenhower administration had done anything to cause Peron's downfall.

Expert Electronic Equipment For CF-105 To Be Made In Canada

OTTAWA (CP) — Quantity production of electronic equipment being developed in the United States for the RCAF's new CF-105 supersonic jet fighter is expected to come from Canadian firms, an air force spokesman said Saturday.

He was commenting on a Washington report of a United States Air Force announcement that a multi-million-dollar research and development contract for an electronic system for the RCAF's CF-105 has been let to the Radio Corporation of America.

The USAF announcement said RCA got the contract, awarded on behalf of the Canadian Defence Production Department, for development of a "complete electronic system for fire control, navigation and communication, and an integrated automatic flight control system."

The RCAF spokesman declined to say the amount of the contract. It was understood, however, that since it is for development work it will be flexible, running from $10,000,000 to $15,000,000.

It is expected RCA will develop the prototype electronic system for the CF-105, expected to fly at about 1,500 miles an hour. Then enough systems for several prototypes of the aircraft are likely to be produced by the U. S. firm.

Once the plane is proven and goes into full production, Canadian firms are expected to turn out the electronic equipment for it.
