Expect Early Commons Debate On Health Plan

OTTAWA (CP) — The federal government's health insurance proposals to the provinces likely will be studied in detail early in February by members of the Commons. Early opportunity for members to delve into the federal plan will be provided with re-establishment of this session of the Commons estimates committee. The special committee was set up last session for the first time to consider departmental spending programs and was regarded as a success by all parties.

A notice of motion for another committee this session now is on the order paper and likely will be proposed by Prime Minister St. Laurent this week or early next week. All parties are expected to support the motion on grounds that the committee makes it possible for the Commons itself to spend less time on estimates.

The government plans to refer the estimates of four departments to the committee for detailed scrutiny. The first will be those of health and welfare, opening up opportunity for discussion of the health insurance proposals. Other departmental estimates likely to be referred to the committee are labor mines and technical surveys and post office. Last session's committee studied expenditures of the departments of finance, citizenship and immigration, northern affairs and veterans affairs.

Several hundred persons watched inventor Igor Bensen put the device through its paces. "If you can ride a bicycle you can fly this machine," he declared.
