CONTRACT BRIDGE

By R. JAV BECKER

North dealer. Both sides vulnerable. NORTH KQ82 KQ107 6 AKJ5 WEST A7 A653 J7532 874 EAST A4 5 A10984 Q9632 SOUTH J109653 J942 KQ 10

The bidding: North East South West 1 4 1 4 4 4 Opening lead—three of diamonds. Defence is sometimes a delicate mechanism. This is especially true where the defence in a hand is a partnership effort rather than an individual undertaking.

Each defender has a responsibility to prevent his partner from making a mistake, if it is possible for him to do so. A defender should attempt to guide partner toward the best defence, and the failure to do so may result in equal culpability if an error takes place.

East won the diamond lead and returned the eight of hearts. If West had won the heart with the ace and returned a heart, the contract would have been quickly defeated.

But West had no way of knowing whether East had a singleton heart or a doubleton. West realized the game contract could not be beaten unless East had the ace of trump, but the question still remained whether East had started with one heart or two.

If East had two hearts, it was vital not to take two hearts immediately, but to duck the first round. Then, when East got in with the presumed ace of spades, he would have a heart to return and get a ruff.

But if East had a singleton, the way to beat the hand was to take the heart ace at once and return a heart. West guessed wrong. He ducked the heart, East never got his ruff, and the contract was made.

East could have relieved his partner of the guess and saved the situation. From East's viewpoint, the contract could not be beaten unless West had the ace of hearts.

To avoid any ambiguity as to the meaning of the heart return, East should have first cashed the ace of spades and then led a heart.

West could not now fail to interpret the lead. To wait with the ace of hearts would be futile. Obviously, declarer could draw trumps to prevent a ruff.

So West would have been forced to take the ace of hearts and return a heart as the only chance of beating the contract.

DAILY CRYPTOQUOTE — Here's how to work it: AXYDLBAAXR is LONGFELLOW

One letter simply stands for another. In this sample A is used for the three L's, X for the two O's, etc. Single letters, apostrophies, the length and formation of the words are all hints. Each day the code letters are different.
