

Russians Meet Poles Over Nikita Ouster

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet news agency Tass has disclosed new Soviet Communist party first secretary Leonid Brezhnev, and Premier Alexei Kosygin held a secret meeting "the other day" with Wladyslaw Gomulka, the Polish Communist chief.

The obvious aim of the party was to explain the ouster of Nikita Khrushchev, but Tass did not mention his Gomulka was one of Khrushchev's most loyal political supporters and a close personal friend.

It said the first meeting of the new Kremlin leadership and Communist chiefs from abroad took place in the Polish border town near the Polish border.

He said the conference, who also included Polish Premier Josef Cyrankiewicz, "discussed problems of further development of relations between the Communist party of the Soviet Union and the Polish United Workers' party, and also of developing all-round co-operation between the Soviet Union and the Polish People's Republic."

A delegation of the French Communist party is currently here to demand an explanation of the disgrace of Khrushchev. An Austrian group is scheduled to arrive today and one from Italy on Tuesday.

Much of the surprise of the Soviet party, there has been world-wide unease in Communist circles over the unexpected shift. The excuse of Khrushchev's ill health and advancing age has not been readily accepted.

Khrushchev and Gomulka were especially close. When Poles rose in revolt against Communism, Oct. 20, 1956, the two men managed to patch up a relationship which kept the two countries in nominal alliance.

The urgency of this meeting may indicate there is more trouble brewing in Poland with out Khrushchev to soothe the volatile Poles.

The world's longest footpath—the Appalachian Trail—winds 2,650 miles through 14 U.S. states.

Deportation Suspended Three Months

OTTAWA (CP) — Immigration Minister Tremblay has ordered a three-month suspension of the deportation order against Daisy Maud Henry, a nurse's aide from Jamaica, who was ordered deported because she failed to mention that she had two children when she entered the country.

Her application to bring two illegitimate children to Canada was denied. The proceedings took place in Toronto.

Mr. Tremblay told the Commons Monday that the deportation order was made because the woman entered the country on a misrepresentation. However, he had ordered a three-month postponement of the order so "all the circumstances can be thoroughly reviewed."

Last week, the minister said a departmental official had been disciplined for statements he made about the woman. A clergyman said in Toronto he had been told by a department official that Canada had a right to select its citizens and that Jamaicans often live together without getting married.

SHOP NOW ... BEFORE NOV. 25th
TELL US IT'S FOR CHRISTMAS and we won't
Bill you until January ...

YOUR CHRISTMAS SHOPPING WILL BE SO MUCH EASIER IF YOU USE OUR EARLY SHOPPING PLAN AND A CONVENIENT HOLMAN'S OPTIONAL ACCOUNT WITH NO DOWN PAYMENT AND FIRST MONTHLY PAYMENT DUE IN FEBRUARY 1964.

IF YOU ALREADY HAVE AN ACCOUNT, THERE WILL BE NO INCREASE IN PAYMENTS ON PURCHASES MADE BEFORE NOVEMBER 30th UNTIL FEBRUARY 1964.

A small monthly service charge will be added in the usual way.

Holman's of P.E.I.

CARRIERS IN U.S.-SPANISH MANEUVERS

These are the U.S. carriers Okinawa, foreground, and a B-52 bomber from which two Marine helicopters took off Monday morning, later colliding and crashing during joint U.S.-Spanish amphibious maneuvers near Huelva, in Southern Spain. The ships are shown cruising off the coast of Spain. (AP Wirephoto via cable from Madrid).

Theological, Biblical Scholarship Given Encouragement By Council

By BERNARD DALY
 Rome (CP)—Great encouragement for theological and biblical scholarship, including work on a common Bible text for all Christians, is seen as a result of an Ecumenical Council document on divine revelation.

Both Paul-Emile Cardinal Leger of Montreal Archbishop George B. Flahiff of Winnipeg spoke during discussion of the text and drew attention to its importance for scholarship in the Roman Catholic Church.

Outside the council hall, many theologians and Bible scholars praised it for the encouragement it gives to scientific research into scriptural subjects. Rev. Francis J. McCol, New York Jesuit who is a professor at the Pontifical Biblical Institute here, told a press panel that the council text will already be undertaken, including one in Ceylon and another in Tanganyika, the latter a translation into Swahili.

In English, publication in Scotland this fall of a Catholic edition of the Protestant Bible is seen as an important step. Cardinal Lezer and Archbishop Flahiff both declared in their council talks that there must be careful study not only of the Bible but of what is taught and said in the Catholic church generally.

He said there have been times when truths clearly founded in Scripture and tradition have not been understood in the day-to-day life of the church, and other times when practices and teachings which did not correspond to divine tradition have been part of church life.

Hence, said Archbishop Flahiff, he wanted the council document on revelation to stress that the church "must continually discern what are the authentic elements of tradition."

He said he was in agreement about the text with Cardinal Lezer, who insisted that the transcendence of Holy Scripture and apostolic tradition should be emphasized over ordinary church teaching.

Experts here, commenting on the point raised by two Canadian prelates, made a distinction between what they called ordinary and "extraordinary" church teachings.

Extraordinary pronouncements are those coming from formal councils or from the Pope on solemn occasions. In the eyes of the church, these are infallibly in line with Scripture and apostolic tradition.

Ordinary pronouncements, such as a sermon by a bishop or a talk by the Pope to a visiting group are in a different category and may be subject to qualifications or fuller development.

much the same way, it is said, some later scholar may puzzle over the literary style of 20th-century writers and wonder whether they really meant someone died when they used the expression "dead tired" or "dead ahead."

HELPS TRANSLATORS
 Then, with his knowledge of theology, the scholar tries to fit the pieces into the total understanding of sacred Scripture and church teaching.

This process, it is explained, leads not only to deeper interpretations, but also to clearer and more perfect Bible translations.

The council text refers to the possibility of Roman Catholics using translations made through a common effort with non-Catholics.

Council experts noted that a number of such projects have already been undertaken, including one in Ceylon and another in Tanganyika, the latter a translation into Swahili.

In English, publication in Scotland this fall of a Catholic edition of the Protestant Bible is seen as an important step.

Cardinal Lezer and Archbishop Flahiff both declared in their council talks that there must be careful study not only of the Bible but of what is taught and said in the Catholic church generally.

He said there have been times when truths clearly founded in Scripture and tradition have not been understood in the day-to-day life of the church, and other times when practices and teachings which did not correspond to divine tradition have been part of church life.

Hence, said Archbishop Flahiff, he wanted the council document on revelation to stress that the church "must continually discern what are the authentic elements of tradition."

He said he was in agreement about the text with Cardinal Lezer, who insisted that the transcendence of Holy Scripture and apostolic tradition should be emphasized over ordinary church teaching.

Experts here, commenting on the point raised by two Canadian prelates, made a distinction between what they called ordinary and "extraordinary" church teachings.

Extraordinary pronouncements are those coming from formal councils or from the Pope on solemn occasions. In the eyes of the church, these are infallibly in line with Scripture and apostolic tradition.

Ordinary pronouncements, such as a sermon by a bishop or a talk by the Pope to a visiting group are in a different category and may be subject to qualifications or fuller development.

much the same way, it is said, some later scholar may puzzle over the literary style of 20th-century writers and wonder whether they really meant someone died when they used the expression "dead tired" or "dead ahead."

HELPS TRANSLATORS
 Then, with his knowledge of theology, the scholar tries to fit the pieces into the total understanding of sacred Scripture and church teaching.

This process, it is explained, leads not only to deeper interpretations, but also to clearer and more perfect Bible translations.

The council text refers to the possibility of Roman Catholics using translations made through a common effort with non-Catholics.

Council experts noted that a number of such projects have already been undertaken, including one in Ceylon and another in Tanganyika, the latter a translation into Swahili.

In English, publication in Scotland this fall of a Catholic edition of the Protestant Bible is seen as an important step.

Cardinal Lezer and Archbishop Flahiff both declared in their council talks that there must be careful study not only of the Bible but of what is taught and said in the Catholic church generally.

He said there have been times when truths clearly founded in Scripture and tradition have not been understood in the day-to-day life of the church, and other times when practices and teachings which did not correspond to divine tradition have been part of church life.

Hence, said Archbishop Flahiff, he wanted the council document on revelation to stress that the church "must continually discern what are the authentic elements of tradition."

He said he was in agreement about the text with Cardinal Lezer, who insisted that the transcendence of Holy Scripture and apostolic tradition should be emphasized over ordinary church teaching.

Experts here, commenting on the point raised by two Canadian prelates, made a distinction between what they called ordinary and "extraordinary" church teachings.

Extraordinary pronouncements are those coming from formal councils or from the Pope on solemn occasions. In the eyes of the church, these are infallibly in line with Scripture and apostolic tradition.

Ordinary pronouncements, such as a sermon by a bishop or a talk by the Pope to a visiting group are in a different category and may be subject to qualifications or fuller development.

much the same way, it is said, some later scholar may puzzle over the literary style of 20th-century writers and wonder whether they really meant someone died when they used the expression "dead tired" or "dead ahead."

HELPS TRANSLATORS
 Then, with his knowledge of theology, the scholar tries to fit the pieces into the total understanding of sacred Scripture and church teaching.

This process, it is explained, leads not only to deeper interpretations, but also to clearer and more perfect Bible translations.

The council text refers to the possibility of Roman Catholics using translations made through a common effort with non-Catholics.

Council experts noted that a number of such projects have already been undertaken, including one in Ceylon and another in Tanganyika, the latter a translation into Swahili.

In English, publication in Scotland this fall of a Catholic edition of the Protestant Bible is seen as an important step.

Cardinal Lezer and Archbishop Flahiff both declared in their council talks that there must be careful study not only of the Bible but of what is taught and said in the Catholic church generally.

He said there have been times when truths clearly founded in Scripture and tradition have not been understood in the day-to-day life of the church, and other times when practices and teachings which did not correspond to divine tradition have been part of church life.

Hence, said Archbishop Flahiff, he wanted the council document on revelation to stress that the church "must continually discern what are the authentic elements of tradition."

He said he was in agreement about the text with Cardinal Lezer, who insisted that the transcendence of Holy Scripture and apostolic tradition should be emphasized over ordinary church teaching.

Experts here, commenting on the point raised by two Canadian prelates, made a distinction between what they called ordinary and "extraordinary" church teachings.

Extraordinary pronouncements are those coming from formal councils or from the Pope on solemn occasions. In the eyes of the church, these are infallibly in line with Scripture and apostolic tradition.

Ordinary pronouncements, such as a sermon by a bishop or a talk by the Pope to a visiting group are in a different category and may be subject to qualifications or fuller development.

much the same way, it is said, some later scholar may puzzle over the literary style of 20th-century writers and wonder whether they really meant someone died when they used the expression "dead tired" or "dead ahead."

HELPS TRANSLATORS
 Then, with his knowledge of theology, the scholar tries to fit the pieces into the total understanding of sacred Scripture and church teaching.

This process, it is explained, leads not only to deeper interpretations, but also to clearer and more perfect Bible translations.

The council text refers to the possibility of Roman Catholics using translations made through a common effort with non-Catholics.

Council experts noted that a number of such projects have already been undertaken, including one in Ceylon and another in Tanganyika, the latter a translation into Swahili.

In English, publication in Scotland this fall of a Catholic edition of the Protestant Bible is seen as an important step.

Cardinal Lezer and Archbishop Flahiff both declared in their council talks that there must be careful study not only of the Bible but of what is taught and said in the Catholic church generally.

He said there have been times when truths clearly founded in Scripture and tradition have not been understood in the day-to-day life of the church, and other times when practices and teachings which did not correspond to divine tradition have been part of church life.

Hence, said Archbishop Flahiff, he wanted the council document on revelation to stress that the church "must continually discern what are the authentic elements of tradition."

He said he was in agreement about the text with Cardinal Lezer, who insisted that the transcendence of Holy Scripture and apostolic tradition should be emphasized over ordinary church teaching.

Experts here, commenting on the point raised by two Canadian prelates, made a distinction between what they called ordinary and "extraordinary" church teachings.

Extraordinary pronouncements are those coming from formal councils or from the Pope on solemn occasions. In the eyes of the church, these are infallibly in line with Scripture and apostolic tradition.

Ordinary pronouncements, such as a sermon by a bishop or a talk by the Pope to a visiting group are in a different category and may be subject to qualifications or fuller development.

much the same way, it is said, some later scholar may puzzle over the literary style of 20th-century writers and wonder whether they really meant someone died when they used the expression "dead tired" or "dead ahead."

HELPS TRANSLATORS
 Then, with his knowledge of theology, the scholar tries to fit the pieces into the total understanding of sacred Scripture and church teaching.

This process, it is explained, leads not only to deeper interpretations, but also to clearer and more perfect Bible translations.

The council text refers to the possibility of Roman Catholics using translations made through a common effort with non-Catholics.

Council experts noted that a number of such projects have already been undertaken, including one in Ceylon and another in Tanganyika, the latter a translation into Swahili.

In English, publication in Scotland this fall of a Catholic edition of the Protestant Bible is seen as an important step.

Cardinal Lezer and Archbishop Flahiff both declared in their council talks that there must be careful study not only of the Bible but of what is taught and said in the Catholic church generally.

He said there have been times when truths clearly founded in Scripture and tradition have not been understood in the day-to-day life of the church, and other times when practices and teachings which did not correspond to divine tradition have been part of church life.

Hence, said Archbishop Flahiff, he wanted the council document on revelation to stress that the church "must continually discern what are the authentic elements of tradition."

He said he was in agreement about the text with Cardinal Lezer, who insisted that the transcendence of Holy Scripture and apostolic tradition should be emphasized over ordinary church teaching.

Experts here, commenting on the point raised by two Canadian prelates, made a distinction between what they called ordinary and "extraordinary" church teachings.

Extraordinary pronouncements are those coming from formal councils or from the Pope on solemn occasions. In the eyes of the church, these are infallibly in line with Scripture and apostolic tradition.

Ordinary pronouncements, such as a sermon by a bishop or a talk by the Pope to a visiting group are in a different category and may be subject to qualifications or fuller development.

much the same way, it is said, some later scholar may puzzle over the literary style of 20th-century writers and wonder whether they really meant someone died when they used the expression "dead tired" or "dead ahead."

HELPS TRANSLATORS
 Then, with his knowledge of theology, the scholar tries to fit the pieces into the total understanding of sacred Scripture and church teaching.

This process, it is explained, leads not only to deeper interpretations, but also to clearer and more perfect Bible translations.

The council text refers to the possibility of Roman Catholics using translations made through a common effort with non-Catholics.

Council experts noted that a number of such projects have already been undertaken, including one in Ceylon and another in Tanganyika, the latter a translation into Swahili.

In English, publication in Scotland this fall of a Catholic edition of the Protestant Bible is seen as an important step.

Cardinal Lezer and Archbishop Flahiff both declared in their council talks that there must be careful study not only of the Bible but of what is taught and said in the Catholic church generally.

He said there have been times when truths clearly founded in Scripture and tradition have not been understood in the day-to-day life of the church, and other times when practices and teachings which did not correspond to divine tradition have been part of church life.

Hence, said Archbishop Flahiff, he wanted the council document on revelation to stress that the church "must continually discern what are the authentic elements of tradition."

He said he was in agreement about the text with Cardinal Lezer, who insisted that the transcendence of Holy Scripture and apostolic tradition should be emphasized over ordinary church teaching.

Experts here, commenting on the point raised by two Canadian prelates, made a distinction between what they called ordinary and "extraordinary" church teachings.

Extraordinary pronouncements are those coming from formal councils or from the Pope on solemn occasions. In the eyes of the church, these are infallibly in line with Scripture and apostolic tradition.

Ordinary pronouncements, such as a sermon by a bishop or a talk by the Pope to a visiting group are in a different category and may be subject to qualifications or fuller development.

much the same way, it is said, some later scholar may puzzle over the literary style of 20th-century writers and wonder whether they really meant someone died when they used the expression "dead tired" or "dead ahead."

HELPS TRANSLATORS
 Then, with his knowledge of theology, the scholar tries to fit the pieces into the total understanding of sacred Scripture and church teaching.

This process, it is explained, leads not only to deeper interpretations, but also to clearer and more perfect Bible translations.

The council text refers to the possibility of Roman Catholics using translations made through a common effort with non-Catholics.

Council experts noted that a number of such projects have already been undertaken, including one in Ceylon and another in Tanganyika, the latter a translation into Swahili.

In English, publication in Scotland this fall of a Catholic edition of the Protestant Bible is seen as an important step.

Cardinal Lezer and Archbishop Flahiff both declared in their council talks that there must be careful study not only of the Bible but of what is taught and said in the Catholic church generally.

He said there have been times when truths clearly founded in Scripture and tradition have not been understood in the day-to-day life of the church, and other times when practices and teachings which did not correspond to divine tradition have been part of church life.

Hence, said Archbishop Flahiff, he wanted the council document on revelation to stress that the church "must continually discern what are the authentic elements of tradition."

He said he was in agreement about the text with Cardinal Lezer, who insisted that the transcendence of Holy Scripture and apostolic tradition should be emphasized over ordinary church teaching.

Experts here, commenting on the point raised by two Canadian prelates, made a distinction between what they called ordinary and "extraordinary" church teachings.

Extraordinary pronouncements are those coming from formal councils or from the Pope on solemn occasions. In the eyes of the church, these are infallibly in line with Scripture and apostolic tradition.

Ordinary pronouncements, such as a sermon by a bishop or a talk by the Pope to a visiting group are in a different category and may be subject to qualifications or fuller development.

much the same way, it is said, some later scholar may puzzle over the literary style of 20th-century writers and wonder whether they really meant someone died when they used the expression "dead tired" or "dead ahead."

HELPS TRANSLATORS
 Then, with his knowledge of theology, the scholar tries to fit the pieces into the total understanding of sacred Scripture and church teaching.

This process, it is explained, leads not only to deeper interpretations, but also to clearer and more perfect Bible translations.

The council text refers to the possibility of Roman Catholics using translations made through a common effort with non-Catholics.

Council experts noted that a number of such projects have already been undertaken, including one in Ceylon and another in Tanganyika, the latter a translation into Swahili.

In English, publication in Scotland this fall of a Catholic edition of the Protestant Bible is seen as an important step.

Cardinal Lezer and Archbishop Flahiff both declared in their council talks that there must be careful study not only of the Bible but of what is taught and said in the Catholic church generally.

He said there have been times when truths clearly founded in Scripture and tradition have not been understood in the day-to-day life of the church, and other times when practices and teachings which did not correspond to divine tradition have been part of church life.

Hence, said Archbishop Flahiff, he wanted the council document on revelation to stress that the church "must continually discern what are the authentic elements of tradition."

He said he was in agreement about the text with Cardinal Lezer, who insisted that the transcendence of Holy Scripture and apostolic tradition should be emphasized over ordinary church teaching.

Experts here, commenting on the point raised by two Canadian prelates, made a distinction between what they called ordinary and "extraordinary" church teachings.

Extraordinary pronouncements are those coming from formal councils or from the Pope on solemn occasions. In the eyes of the church, these are infallibly in line with Scripture and apostolic tradition.

Ordinary pronouncements, such as a sermon by a bishop or a talk by the Pope to a visiting group are in a different category and may be subject to qualifications or fuller development.

much the same way, it is said, some later scholar may puzzle over the literary style of 20th-century writers and wonder whether they really meant someone died when they used the expression "dead tired" or "dead ahead."

HELPS TRANSLATORS
 Then, with his knowledge of theology, the scholar tries to fit the pieces into the total understanding of sacred Scripture and church teaching.

This process, it is explained, leads not only to deeper interpretations, but also to clearer and more perfect Bible translations.

The council text refers to the possibility of Roman Catholics using translations made through a common effort with non-Catholics.

Council experts noted that a number of such projects have already been undertaken, including one in Ceylon and another in Tanganyika, the latter a translation into Swahili.

In English, publication in Scotland this fall of a Catholic edition of the Protestant Bible is seen as an important step.

Cardinal Lezer and Archbishop Flahiff both declared in their council talks that there must be careful study not only of the Bible but of what is taught and said in the Catholic church generally.

He said there have been times when truths clearly founded in Scripture and tradition have not been understood in the day-to-day life of the church, and other times when practices and teachings which did not correspond to divine tradition have been part of church life.

Hence, said Archbishop Flahiff, he wanted the council document on revelation to stress that the church "must continually discern what are the authentic elements of tradition."

He said he was in agreement about the text with Cardinal Lezer, who insisted that the transcendence of Holy Scripture and apostolic tradition should be emphasized over ordinary church teaching.

Experts here, commenting on the point raised by two Canadian prelates, made a distinction between what they called ordinary and "extraordinary" church teachings.

Extraordinary pronouncements are those coming from formal councils or from the Pope on solemn occasions. In the eyes of the church, these are infallibly in line with Scripture and apostolic tradition.

Ordinary pronouncements, such as a sermon by a bishop or a talk by the Pope to a visiting group are in a different category and may be subject to qualifications or fuller development.

much the same way, it is said, some later scholar may puzzle over the literary style of 20th-century writers and wonder whether they really meant someone died when they used the expression "dead tired" or "dead ahead."

HELPS TRANSLATORS
 Then, with his knowledge of theology, the scholar tries to fit the pieces into the total understanding of sacred Scripture and church teaching.

This process, it is explained, leads not only to deeper interpretations, but also to clearer and more perfect Bible translations.

The council text refers to the possibility of Roman Catholics using translations made through a common effort with non-Catholics.

Council experts noted that a number of such projects have already been undertaken, including one in Ceylon and another in Tanganyika, the latter a translation into Swahili.

In English, publication in Scotland this fall of a Catholic edition of the Protestant Bible is seen as an important step.

Cardinal Lezer and Archbishop Flahiff both declared in their council talks that there must be careful study not only of the Bible but of what is taught and said in the Catholic church generally.

He said there have been times when truths clearly founded in Scripture and tradition have not been understood in the day-to-day life of the church, and other times when practices and teachings which did not correspond to divine tradition have been part of church life.

Hence, said Archbishop Flahiff, he wanted the council document on revelation to stress that the church "must continually discern what are the authentic elements of tradition."

He said he was in agreement about the text with Cardinal Lezer, who insisted that the transcendence of Holy Scripture and apostolic tradition should be emphasized over ordinary church teaching.

Experts here, commenting on the point raised by two Canadian prelates, made a distinction between what they called ordinary and "extraordinary" church teachings.

Extraordinary pronouncements are those coming from formal councils or from the Pope on solemn occasions. In the eyes of the church, these are infallibly in line with Scripture and apostolic tradition.

Ordinary pronouncements, such as a sermon by a bishop or a talk by the Pope to a visiting group are in a different category and may be subject to qualifications or fuller development.

much the same way, it is said, some later scholar may puzzle over the literary style of 20th-century writers and wonder whether they really meant someone died when they used the expression "dead tired" or "dead ahead."

HELPS TRANSLATORS
 Then, with his knowledge of theology, the scholar tries to fit the pieces into the total understanding of sacred Scripture and church teaching.

This process, it is explained, leads not only to deeper interpretations, but also to clearer and more perfect Bible translations.

The council text refers to the possibility of Roman Catholics using translations made through a common effort with non-Catholics.

Council experts noted that a number of such projects have already been undertaken, including one in Ceylon and another in Tanganyika, the latter a translation into Swahili.

In English, publication in Scotland this fall of a Catholic edition of the Protestant Bible is seen as an important step.

Cardinal Lezer and Archbishop Flahiff both declared in their council talks that there must be careful study not only of the Bible but of what is taught and said in the Catholic church generally.

He said there have been times when truths clearly founded in Scripture and tradition have not been understood in the day-to-day life of the church, and other times when practices and teachings which did not correspond to divine tradition have been part of church life.

Hence, said Archbishop Flahiff, he wanted the council document on revelation to stress that the church "must continually discern what are the authentic elements of tradition."