CAPITOL THEATRE, SUMMERSIDE, FRIDAY AND SATURDAY, JULY 31 AND AUGUST 1ST

—Fulfilling the promise of his first picture, "Singing Guns," Vaughn Monroe, idol of the nation on radio and records, assures himself of a place in the Hollywood star firmament by a superb performance in his second film, "Toughest Man in Arizona," which appears at the Capitol Theatre in Summerside on Friday and Saturday.

In the exciting outdoor adventure film which co-stars lovely Joan Leslie, Vaughn is a U. S. Marshal, Matt Landry, the toughest man in Arizona. As the picture opens Landry stopped to help a wagon train being attacked by Apaches. The only apparent survivors are attractive Mary Kimber (Joan Leslie) and two children, Jesse and Davey Billings. Landry takes them into his home where he is the widowed father of two.

He falls in love with Mary, who believes that her husband, Verne, had died a hero's death in the massacre. But before she can bring herself to accept his proposal, Landry becomes involved in a fresh war on frontier crime. An outlaw, Frank Girard, in the Tombstone jail, has sent his buxom blonde girl friend (Jean Parker) to his two outlaw brothers to help him escape.

Verne, in the meantime, had not been killed in the massacre, but had run away because of cowardice. Attempting to remain anonymous while tending bar in a nearby town, his true identity is discovered by Girard's brothers and they threaten to expose him unless he aids in Frank's escape.

Under the Girard boys orders, Verne taps some telephone wires and learns that Frank is to be smuggled out of the Tombstone jail in a hearse to prevent the irate citizenry from lynching him. The outlaws waylay the hearse kill the driver, wound Landry almost fatally and set Frank free. Verne had also learned by his wire tapping that a big shipment of silver was due by stage. The Girards hold up the stage and steal the silver.

This proves to be the last robbery they commit as Landry suspects the blonde girl friend as being the go-between. He makes her suspicious of Frank's fidelity to her and she tells all. Landry and his aides ride into town and, after an exciting gun fight, capture the outlaws in their hideout.
