Long On Flavor Risotto Has Shorter Grain Rice

FLAKY rice is made from long-grain rice cooked until the rice grains are separate, when it is served "as is," or with seasonings, just melted butter stirred in with a long-handled fork so the rice grains will not be broken. Flaky rice is used as an accompaniment to meat, poultry or fish.

Shorter Grained Variety
Risotto (called "thickened" rice in Italy) is made by cooking short- or medium-grain rice until soft and tender, but still holding its shape. The liquid used instead of water is chicken or beef broth (or the equivalent in broth powder and water).

Tasty seasonings are cooked with the rice, such as garlic, onion, herbs or mushrooms. It is served with grated Parmesan or Romano cheese, or a combination of both, as the first or second course at luncheon or dinner, or as the accompaniment to poultry or meat, in our menu today.

IODÉ Ontario Chapter Holds 45th Annual Dinner

HAMILTON, Ont. (CP)—Rev. Richard D. Jones of Toronto, national executive director of the Canadian Council of Christians and Jews, said Thursday night Canada can only obtain unity through diversity.

Mr. Jones was the guest speaker at the 45th annual dinner meeting of the Ontario chapter, Independent Order Daughters of the Empire, which is holding a three-day convention here.

He rejected both enforced uniformity and the "melting-pot" technique for gaining unity in Canada.

Enforced uniformity, such as that practised by Hitler, will not work, he said, because eliminating people who do not conform to the same background,

MARY HAWORTH

Healthy Minds Will Reject Morbid Advisory Books

Dear Mary Haworth: I was surprised by your recent partisan answer to the matron worried about her husband's sex requirements.

Your conclusion, that the matron's disturbed disapproving reaction is justified, seems to me to conflict with counsel you gave another woman with a similar problem some years ago.

In that instance you said, in effect, that if the husband is a good man whose judgment could be trusted in sex matters also, do not trust him in sex matters also.

Do you think it is possible for a person of one faith (you, for example) to advise others of different faiths on matters of sex deviation? Some faiths consider contraceptives, masturbation and homosexuality to be perversions.

But in many books to be found on our public library shelves (hence to be construed as "propounding allowable social doctrine"), much more tolerant views are presented. Certain sex practices which you might label perverse are included in the normal or permissible category by these writers.

I pose the question only because I've just become aware of the vast range of differing opinions, concerning what constitutes perverse sex behavior. Is there, in our society, a real consensus on the problem?

P.S.: I am your faithful reader and have taken much profit not only from your wonderful answers to people's letters, but also from the books you recommend. Sincerely, C.F.

Dear C. F.: I don't claim total recall concerning what I've written in the past, but I am certain (knowing myself) that I've never advised anybody to let somebody else be the keeper of his or her conscience with respect to sex - deviate behavior.

It is an axiom of sound psychological teaching, also one of the primary planks in the platform of wholesome marriage, that sex behavior in one partner that is repugnant to the other partner is cause for careful stocktaking and responsible readjustment on the part of the person at fault.

In short, good marriage between rightly self-respecting persons with a decent regard for human dignity is not to be exploited as a licensed situation wherein anything goes in terms of carnal gratification. Or where in the wife is supposed (according to "allowable social doctrine") to subscribe to the husband's wishes, however distasteful to her sensibilities.

As to whether it is possible for a person of one faith (myself, for example) to "advise others of different faiths on matters of sex deviate relationships that trouble them" - it certainly is legitimate for me to state my views as such (namely: as my views) when asked to do so. That is the essential validity of the transaction from my side, namely, that I've been asked to say what I think. My measured replies are directed to those who ask and those who choose to imble. They aren't meant for those who don't ask, don't care what I think and - or those who choose to disagree absolutely with any or all of my views.

As to the broad range of contradictory and differing opinions, to be found in books on public library shelves, concerning "what's allowable" sex - wise, I haven't kept posted on what the libraries are offering.

But I do know that a lot of morbidly evil and licentious misguidance is apewed forth by sundry publishing firms today, in the false guise of self-styled advisory sex manuals for married persons.

Some of this rot is smartly assembled, as to type - style, writing style, book binding, etc. to resemble an honest contribution to human enlightenment.

But it cannot deceive life-seasoned mature truth-seekers, whose mental, moral and organic health is sound; because their healthy sensibilities automatically discern the noxious effluvia of evil, which warns them off, as they scan any few pages, opened at random. M.H.

ELLEN'S DIARY

These Ceilings Are Easy To Clean And Redecorate

It is, to say the least, disappointing to find, when come to the new of April morning, that winter has returned overnight. James who sleeps with an ear attuned to the weather had heard it: that wind which comes to us over from the hills of the sunrise. Recalled suddenly from our Dreamland where fragrant rose bloom profusely along pretty garden walls, and the bird song is tuneful, and if one chooses to adventure farther there is no end to the beautiful paths she may follow, we saw him in one of the early hours of the morning, by that window which looks down to the mill in the valley below.

"It's as the forecast said - and as I myself thought last night: we're getting some snow-fall. Well, well," he commented, "it doesn't look as though there'll be much fieldwork done in April, now does it?" A soft snowy coverlet was spread on the fields in this morning's first light, the roofs were again white - spread...

"Do you like snow?" That was on the questionnaire composed and presented to us by Alex this evening. Among other questions posed to be answered by a "Yes" or a "No" were, "Was Wolfe a king?" and "Was Newfoundland the Province that entered Confederation in 1873?" We, of course, failed to make a perfect score. Nor was it to be expected of us, grandmothers by and large being regarded in this family as "little girls who failed to grow up!"

"So you like snow!" he exclaimed checking over our answers. "Would you explain the 'Oh, or a number of reasons: because it spreads a new countenance on the fields and feathers the trees prettily, so that one can imagine she lives in Fairyland with Queen Mab. It cleans the air, waters the soil, helps the springs and brooks, and besides" we added with a chuckle, "it brings the summer!"

"If... but no that wouldn't do" Peter decided this afternoon. "I was thinking you could use a long-handled mop. But I guess there's no other way except by scrubbing it with a cloth is there?" He had stopped his play to watch us wash the grime of the winter's living from the kitchen ceiling - Among our blessings, and brought to mind in the seasonal cleanings, is the fact that those in this old house are conveniently low, easily reached to clean or re-decorate.

"What would it be like to have a pink ceiling?" he wondered. "It would be pretty" we said, "but not so nice as a white one."

"What was the prettiest ceiling that you ever saw?" he queried.

"It was in a bedroom we knew as a little girl. It was papered with a light blue and white ceiling paper, decorated with silver stars. So that when you went to bed by lamplight, they glittered and shone. They were in mind when you closed your eyes. And if you wakened through the night, and it was dark at the window, and a wind blew up eerily from the shore, you weren't lonely or afraid. You had stars for company overhead, so near that if you stood up in bed you could touch them."

"I'd like to have seen it" he smiled. Spring - snow this morning, we came to. But the thawing takes it quickly. It disappears in no time - that new - fallen, vanished as does now this day, loved, lived and lost.

Until tomorrow - Diary - Good - night...
