A COUNTLESS HOST.

It is hardly a misnomer to call the crowds that have thronged our store every day since the first of the year; countless host. This being true, it follows that countless bargains must have left our counters. But it does not follow that there are not countless bargains left to gratify the hearts of the practised buyers. See our tables of Men's Overcoats. Here, for example, is a pen picture of one, see how it reads.

- 18 Men's Overcoats, worth $13.50, now $6.75.
- 6 " " " 12.00, now 6.00

COMMENT IS NEEDLESS

McKAY WOOLEN COMPANY,

THE GREAT BARGAIN GIVERS.

Bumpy's Umbrellas.
"Another umbrella gone," growled Bumpy. "That's a dozen within a year and nearly two stormy months yet to run. I suppose that you give them away. Mrs. Bumpy, just as you do my shoes, hats, pants and coats. The inevitable result of your mistaken generosity will be our impoverishment. There is something constitutionally wrong in a woman that will strive to make a condensed charitable organization of herself when every business man is making a life-and-death struggle to keep his head above water."
"I make it a point," replied the good Mrs. Bumpy, "not to give anything away until you have cast it aside. When you discover that any of your old garments are gone you at once imagine that you wanted them for hunting, fishing or working about the house. But sometimes I retain these rejected articles of your wardrobe for eighteen months at a stretch and you never find use for any of them. It is far better to have them keeping some poor fellow warm."

"Allow me to suggest, madam, that you are dodging the main issue. Can even your broad and elastic charity reconcile you to seeing one of these Weary Willies who has become an established feature of our cosmopolitan citizenship, tramping about with his hair through his hat, the soles of his shoes flapping and his clothes flying innumerable signs of distress, while he sports a gold-headed, silk umbrella? Is not his make-up as incongruous as that of the African ruler who dresses in nature's garb and wears a bell-crown pling hat as the emblem of his imperialism?"
"I'm inclined to think so. But I have never given one of your umbrellas away. You have left them scattered all along the route of your daily travel. You have been a bonanza to the ubiquitous umbrella thief, and I happen to know by telephoning to the office that at least two of your expensive umbrellas are there."
"Why didn't you say so? What do you mean by keeping me in this state of suspense? I am too busy a man to have my time taken up in furnishing you with laughing material. I want you to understand this once for all, and if ever I learn of your giving away another of my umbrellas, I will deduct its value from your allowance. This place must cease to be a free umbrella dispensary."

It is curious to note that the 3,000 priests in Ireland are ruled by four archbishops and twenty-five bishops, while for England one archbishop and fifteen bishops are considered equal to the task of organizing the work of nearly 3,000 priests.

PROGRESS

When I've thought the deepest I can,
I shall take my unfinished thought,
And life's large, excellent plan
Out-witted my narrow breast.
When I'm dead, I say,
They will find the way.

When I've sung my defective songs,
That touch the soul's outermost edge,
When I've gazed at the world's wild wrongs,
And with labor have entered my wedges,
I shall die at last
And the work be past.

But some day those yet unborn
Shall take my unfinished thought,
This work that has eaten and worn;
Then—till did I go for naught?
But what will they do?
If only know?

They will write, they will paint and well,
Thought, color, that we have dreamed;
They will plan, sing, struggle, and tell
Of the past, how we were, it seemed.
And we who are dead
Are forgot overhead.

A MYSTERIOUS SIGNAL.

"We are always longing for supernatural visitation," said the raconteur of the club as he blew rings of smoke into the air, "but it is my impression that we would be frightened out of a year's story just to show how a slight incident that could not immediately be accounted for started the perspiration on the forehead of two men who do not exactly consider themselves cowards."

"I was in Washington stopping at one of those small hotels in the neighborhood of Fourteenth and H. streets, and occupied a small single room which was large enough to swing a cat in. As I had no cat to swing I did not care about the size of the apartment, which I only used as sleeping hours."

"One night I entered my room about 11 p. m., and as it was lighted by the face glass showing through the transom, I concluded not to strike a match and sleep after a day of diplomatic work, and ready to plunge at once into my little bed."

"I began to doze when a sound came to me from some part of that room which for a moment paralyzed me. It was first a hiss, then a smart rap as if intended for a signal, and it came from every part of the room at once, and died out instantly without an echo or breath."

"I said to myself, though curtain of my knowledge that no rat made the sound; then I lit my gas in a hurry and began to investigate. I looked in the wardrobe, under the bed and over it, and found nothing—indeed, I did not expect anything to materialize, and was not disappointed. But what then made that uncanny sound?

"I stood in the middle of the room looking toward all the four corners at once, my ears strained to listen, when I saw the mysterious blow, the hiss following with painful distinctness. This time I located it at the window. There was a lace curtain and beneath it a shade. I investigated both, and there was not a thing to be seen. I swung the shade out, and looked at the window to see if anything or anyone could reach it from the outside. And as I pressed my face to the glass there came a snap that made me jump back to the middle of the room, and stand there frightened—yes, actually frightened at this succession of mysterious signals."

"Suddenly it occurred to me to ring for the night clerk—he would know if it were a rat and help me hunt for it. Mr. Young instantly came and I briefly told him in a matter-of-fact way that I thought there was a rat in the room—'that I heard it but could not locate it. I mentioned the window as its probable camping ground. The night clerk was moving toward the window, and I was looking at him with some interest, wondering how the sound would affect him if he heard it, when, without any pre- liminaries, it came. He jumped back to the door, then recovered himself, and asked in a shaky voice:

"Have you examined the window?"

"Yes, the thing, whatever it is, must be in the wall."

"It is not a rat," he said with firm conviction.

"Then what is it?"

"I don't know."

"We both waited until it came again. Then Mr. Young said, in a relieved voice:

"It's the wind. I saw the shade tremble."

"It is not the wind," I said as steadily as I could; "there is not a breeze, and to-night, besides, something slapped the glass—it was a deliberate movement."

"I saw that shade move," reiterated the night clerk.

"Look at the other side of that shade," I suggested. He had merely examined the window itself, but the shade pressed close against the glass.

"Mr. Young's head disappeared behind the shade, and then a little cry came from Mr. Young:

"I've got it!"

"No, a monstrous bat. You have had your window open some time since you came and lit it up in a hurry. Come and help me put it out."

"I pulled down the upper sash, and Mr. Bat, whose open wings as he clung to the inside of the shade extended its ruin width across, was ejected by a few smart snaps on the curtain. He squeaked a parting salute, and we saw by his sharp ears and fox-like head that he was a genuine vampire, a bird of evil, and an eerie thing for a room-mate."

"Had it been summer time I might have expected such a visitor, but I forgot that Washington winters were mild enough for the occasional exploits of such nocturnes."

"The night clerk told me that there was a ravine between Washington and Arlington where these midnight marauders hung heads down by the thousand, but that had positively nothing to do with my leaving Washington. I do not like a climate where you cannot leave your window open at night with perfect safety."

"Very dramatically told," remarked the president. "That little incident of calling the night clerk to discover the bat was most artistic—a mere ordinary clerk would have spoiled the story."

—The Raconteur.

THE FIRST BRITISH RIFLE.

Its Bullets Were Found in With a Mallet.

The first rifle adopted into the British service dates from about the year 1800, when the old 95th Regiment which later became the Rifle Brigade, was armed with "Baker's rifles," so called from the name of the inventor. There were two patterns of this arm, one with eleven and the other with seven grooves, the twist of rifling being one turn in 136 inches. The weight of the rifle was eight pounds, nine ounces, and its length three feet nine and three-quarter inches, the length of the barrel was two feet six inches, and bore .705 inch. The bullet was spherical. Before being rammed home it was wrapped in a greased patch, there being a cavity in the butt for carrying these patches. After firing a few rounds, the barrel became so foul that it was difficult to drive the bullets home, a wooden mallet was therefore served out with each rifle to drive the ball down the barrel. These rifles remained in the service till 1850, being then superseded by the Brunswick rifle. The Minié rifle was introduced in 1851, the Enfield with Snider breech and the Martini-Henry in 1874.

DO FISH SUFFER PAIN?

Some Facts About Them Which Show That They Do Not.

All fishes have nerves, and in some respects fishes are extremely sensitive. A fish that has buried itself in sand or mud so completely that only the tip of its tail fin is above the bottom will feel upon the slightest touch, and instantly dart out of its sandy bed. A fish is very sensitive to movements in the water surrounding it. A shadow falling upon the water will startle a fish into flight. But sensitive as fishes are in some respects, it is probable that they do not suffer pain from injuries received.

Fishes are extremely sensitive to the nose. A fish that had in pursuit of prey run its nose against a rock might shake its head violently, perhaps in pain; but fishes sustain serious injuries from actual wounds without showing any indication of pain. In fact, the indications tend to show that they do not suffer.

A fish that has been hooked by an angler, but has escaped, perhaps carrying off a hook in its mouth, may a few minutes afterwards bite again at another hook. Such instances are not infrequent. In such cases the hook would probably be concealed by the bait and the fish would not be likely to see it, but the fact that it is ready to take the bait shows that it is continuing to feed, which it would scarcely be likely to do if it were suffering great pain. A shark from whose body all the viscera had been removed has continued to feed.

Sensitive as fishes are about the nose, many of them use the nose in pushing stones and gravel about in building a nest for the female to spawn in. The salmon notoriously often wears its snout down to the bone in excavating a cavity for a nest, and often it wears off its tail to a mere stub in brushing out stones and gravel. Yet such fishes frequently recover from their injuries and return to the ocean.

Timid and sensitive as fishes are in some respects, they fight one another vigorously. In such fights they may receive injuries that might be described as terrible. To these injuries they may pay so little attention that after the fight is over they go on with their building or with whatever occupation they had been engaged in.

Injuries which would throw a human being into a state of helplessness do not interrupt the current of fish life. The fish may afterward die from its injuries, but apparently it does not suffer pain from them. Fishes sometimes survive injuries of a remarkable character. The stomach of a captured codfish was found to be pierced by a spine of a flounder which it had swallowed. The sharp, thorn-like spine projected about half an inch beyond the outer wall of the stomach into the fish's body; apparently the codfish had suffered no inconvenience from this. The wound caused by the spine had healed around it, and the codfish was fat and in good condition generally.

A WISE PHYSICIAN,

BROAD OF OPINION. HE THROWS PREJUDICE TO THE WINDS.

Dr. J. L. Limes Endorses Dr. Williams' Pink Pills Because He Has Found Them Efficacious - Believes the First Duty of a Physician is to Cure His Patients.

From the News, St. John, Kansas.

Hearing that Dr. J. L. Limes, of St. John, Kansas, had used Dr. Williams' Pink Pills in his practice with great success, a reporter called upon and interviewed him regarding the matter. The reporter found the doctor a very pleasant and a reliable man of probably fifty years of age. We were much impressed with his manner, as it was kindly and dignified. When we broached the subject of our call, he proceeded to give us the following publication:

My attention has been called to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People by several persons of my acquaintance who had been greatly benefited or entirely cured by their use. I determine to give them a trial in my practice and if they proved to be satisfactory I would adopt them and use them regularly. Since I began prescribing them I have never had cause to regret my determination. I have used Dr. Williams' Pink Pills in a number of cases of nervous troubles, neurasthenia, rheumatism, etc., and in every case have been exceptionally well pleased with the results, and I can honestly and conscientiously recommend Pink Pills for the above diseases. I shall continue to use them and recommend them to my patients, for I consider there is nothing better for the disease they are recommended to cure than Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. If you desire to use this for publication you can attach my name. I am well known in this part of Kansas. I am secretary of the U. S. Pension examining Surgeon's Board for Stafford & Co., Kansas, and chairman of the Republican County Central Committee for the above named county."

Yours faithfully,
JESSE L. LIMES, M. D.
Editor St. John News.

We also ascertained the doctor's standing in St. John by a few interviews with prominent people, which we herewith publish along with the doctor's statement regarding Pink Pills:-

"I am well acquainted with Dr. J. L. Limes, and know him to be an honorable and straightforward man, and whatever he may say can be relied upon."

H. J. COXSWELL,
Supt. of Schools.

I have known Dr. J. L. Limes for a number of years, and am well known to him as a prominent physician, and a man well liked in this city.

Howard Gray,
Cashier Commercial Bank.

I have known Dr. J. L. Limes for several years, and as a physician he is very prominent, and his reputation for honor and integrity are too well known to be questioned for an instant.

H. J. COXSWELL,
Editor St. John News.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are a blood builder and nerve restorer. They supply the blood with its life and health-giving properties, thus driving disease from the system. There are numerous pink colored imitations, against which the public is warned. The genuine Pink Pills can be had only in boxes the wrapper around which bears the full trade mark, "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People." Refuse all others.
